guai'a-cum (-kŭm), n. [NL., fr. Sp. guayaco, from native name in Haiti.] 1. [cap.] Bot. A small genus of tropical American zygophyllaceous trees and shrubs, having pinnate leaves, mostly blue flowers, and capsular fruit.

2. The hard greenish brown wood yielded by trees of this genus, esp. by G. officinale. See LIGNUM-VITÆ.

3. A greenish resin with a faint balsamic odor, obtained from the trunk of G. officinale, used medicinally as a remedy for gout, rheumatism, and skin diseases. It possesses the property of changing color in the presence of various oxidizing agents. It is said to consist chiefly of three acids, guai-ac'ic acid, $C_{20}H_{24}O_4$, guai'a-con'ic acid, $C_{20}H_{24}O_5$, and guai'a-cin'ic acid, $C_{19}H_{20}O_6$, all probably condensation products of tiglic aldehyde and guaiacol. Also, the similar resin from other species of Guaiacum.

4. A related tree of Texas and Mexico (Porlieria angustifolia), or its wood or resinous exudate.

guai-ap'er-ol (gwī-ăp'ĕr-ŏl, -ōl), n. [guaiacol + piperidine.] Pharm. A white crystalline substance, $C_{12}H_{15}O_2N$, used in the treatment of phthisis. It is a compound of piperidine and guaiacol.

gua-má' (gwä-má'), n. [Sp. Cuba and Porto Rico.] A tropical American mimosaceous tree (Inga laurina) with quadripinnate leaves and slender clusters of pale flowers. It is much used as a shade for coffee plantations.

guan (gwän), n. Any of various species of large, more or less arboreal, gallinaceous birds of Central and South America, constituting Penelope, Pipile, Ortalis, and allied genera. They form the subfamily Penelopinæ of the family Cracidæ. Several of the species are often tamed, but rarely breed in captivity. One species (see CHACHALACA) is found as far north as Texas.

Guan (Penelope cristata). (1/12) gua-na'co (gwä-nä'kō), n.; pl. -cos (-kōz). [Sp. guanaco, Peruv. huanacu. Cf. HUANACO.] A South American mammal (Lama huanacos) of the camel family, larger and more graceful than the llama, inhabiting the temperate parts of South America, including Patagonia. It is supposed to be the wild form from which both the llama and alpaca are derived.

gua'na-mine (gwä'nȧ-mĭn; gwa'nȧ-mēn'; 184), n. Also -min. [guanidine + amine.] Org. Chem. Any of a series of heterocyclic bases formed by heating guanidine salts of the fatty acids; as, formo*guanamine*.

Guan'che (gwän'chā), n. [Sp.] One of the aboriginal inhabitants of the Canary Islands, exterminated or absorbed by European conquerors in the 15th century. They are described as a tall, blond, handsome people, brave warriors, and well advanced in neolithic culture. The known vestiges of their language seem to ally them to the Berbers.

gua'ni-dine (gwä'nĭ-dĭn; -dēn; 184), n. Also -din. Org. Chem. A strong base, $NH:C(NH_2)_2$, formed by the oxidation of guanine, by heating ammonium sulphocyanate, and in other ways. Its crystals are deliquescent.

gua'nine (gwä'nĭn; -nēn, 184), n. Also -nin. Chem. A white basic substance, $C_5H_5ON_5$, occurring in guano, in the liver, pancreas, and other glands of mammals, and in many plants. It is closely related to uric acid.

gua'no (gwä'nō), n.; pl. -NOS (-nōz). [Sp. guano, fr. Peruv. huanu dung.] 1. A substance found in great abundance on some coasts or islands frequented by sea fowls, and composed chiefly of their excrement. It is rich in phosphates, nitrogenous matter, and other material for plant growth, and has hence been much used as a fertilizer. The best deposits, however, are now exhausted.

2. Any manure of similar character, as the excrement of bats, preparations of fish refuse, etc.

gua-nyl'ic (gwa-nĭl'ĭk), a. [guanine + -yl + -ic.] Physiol. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a nucleic acid which is obtained from the pancreas, and which yields guanine as one of its chief cleavage products.

gua-pe'na (gwȧ-pē'nȧ), n. [Prob. fr. native name.] A West Indian sciænoid with two dark brown stripes on each side.

Guapena (Eques lanceolatus). (1/8)

Gua-ra'ni (-nē), n. An Indian of an extensive linguistic stock originally forming the bulk of the native peoples of Paraguay. They were early Christianized by the Jesuits and formed into the settlements called the Paraguay Missions, which were maintained until the expulsion of the Jesuits in 1768, after which the Guaranis rapidly diminished. — Gua-ra'ni-an (gwä-rä'nĭ-ăn), a.

guar'an-tee' (găr'ăn-tē'), n.; pl. -TEES (-tēz'). [Perh. orig. fr. Sp. garante (Oxf. E. D.) a guarantor, warrant (see WARRANT), but confused with guaranty, prob. influenced by words like assignee, lessee, etc. See GUARANTY; cf. WARRANTEE.] 1. One who makes a guaranty; one who acts as a surety or gives security; a guarantor.

2. Act of one who makes a guaranty or acts as a surety. = GUARANTY, n., 1.

3. That which is given by way of security; something made or held as a security. = GUARANTY, n., 3.

4. The person to whom a guaranty is made; — the correlative of guarantor. See def. 1, above.

☞ This late sense is probably due to mistaken identification of the ending with the -ee suffix of many legal terms.

guar'an-tee', v. t.; GUAR'AN-TEED' (-tēd'); GUAR'AN-TEE'ING. 1. To be a guarantee, warranty, or surety for; esp., to undertake to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of (another); to become responsible for the fulfillment of (the agreement of another). See GUARANTY, n.

2. To engage for the existence, permanence, nature, or the like, of (something); to undertake to do or secure (something); to warrant (which see).

3. To give a guaranty to (another); to give or furnish security to; to secure; — used with against, from, in; as, guaranteed in their liberty by a constitution.

On condition of being guaranteed more or less efficaciously against his tyranny. J. S. Mill.

Syn. — See INSURE.

guarantee association or company. A corporation or joint-stock company which makes guaranties or acts as a surety on the principle of insurance.

guar'an-tor' (găr'ăn-tôr'), n. [See GUARANTY; cf. WARRANTOR.] Law. a One who makes or gives a guaranty or surety; one who enters in a guaranty.

The terms surety and guarantor are often confounded from the fact that a guarantor is in common acceptation a surety for another. The rules of the common law as to sureties are not strictly applied to guarantors, but rather the rules of the law merchant, and the true distinction seems to be this: That a surety is in the first instance answerable for the debt for which he makes himself responsible, and his contracts are often specialties, while a guarantor is only liable when default is made by the party whose undertaking is guaranteed, and his agreement is one of simple contract. A surety is not, as a matter of course, entitled to notice, and is not discharged by the insolvency of the principal debtor, for want of notice, although the principal debtor was solvent when the debt became due guar'an-ty (găr'ăn-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [OF. guarantie, garantie, F. garantie, fr. OF. guarantir, garantir, to warrant, to guaranty, F. garantir. See WARRANT, v. & n.; cf. WARRANTY, GUARANTEE.] 1. An undertaking to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty, of another, in case of the failure of such other to pay or perform, or (otherwise expressed) a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; a warranty; a security; a guarantee. In British usage the guarantor (who is usually called the surety) is in general liable upon the default of the principal without notice, unless otherwise stipulated. In some of the United States the same usage obtains, as in the State of New York. In other States a distinction is made between guaranty and suretyship, guarantor and surety, the distinction being given in Courtis v. Dennis (7 Metcalf, 518), cited under GUARANTOR. Where this distinction obtains the guarantor is usually held to be liable only on due proceedings having been ineffectually taken to enforce the claim against the principal. In general a guaranty comes within the provisions of the Statute of Frauds providing that "no action shall be brought whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person . . . unless the agreement, . . . or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith" or his lawfully authorized agent.

2. An agreement by which one person promises to make another secure in the possession, enjoyment, or the like, of something; an agreement by which one undertakes to make sure or certain the existence, continuance, or the like, of something; specif., Internat. Law, an agreement or convention by which one or more states agree to secure to one or more other states the enjoyment of certain claims, rights, or possessions, the continuance of certain conditions, or the like.

3. Something given or possessed as security for the existence or continuance of something; something given or had as a means of securing the existence, performance, or fulfillment of something; a security.

CURATOR, TUTOR, COMMITTEE. The various species of guardians recognized by the law of England at the time of the separation of the United States in 1776, and to which those of the United States in general conform, are: Guardian by nature. a The father with respect to the person of his heir apparent or heiress presumptive — of little importance and doubtful existence since the abolition of tenures in chivalry. b A natural guardian. Guardian for nurture or by nurture, the father, or upon his decease the mother, with respect to the persons of all children under 14 years of age. Guardianship by nature and for nurture as distinguished from the general parental control are now of no practical importance. (See NATURAL GUARDIAN, below.) Guardian by election, a guardian elected by an infant himself having lands in socage upon attaining his 14th year. The law upon this kind of guardianship is obscure, and this guardianship is nearly or wholly disused. Guardian by statute, or, as commonly called, testamentary guardian, a person appointed as guardian by deed or will (by virtue of 12 Car. II. (1660) c. 24, or later enabling statute). Guardian in socage, the person who in case of the legal estate of lands held in socage having descended to an infant, is his next of blood to whom the inheritance cannot descend. Guardian by custom. a A guardian according to a custom existing in respect of lands of copyhold tenure, where the right of guardianship falls to the next of blood incapable of inheriting the estate, or may be claimed by special custom by the lord of the manor or his nominee. b A guardian according to a now disused custom of London. Guardian ad litem [L., for the suit], a guardian appointed by a court of justice to conduct or defend a particular suit or legal proceeding on behalf of the infant. Such a guardian has no charge of the infant's person or property. To these classes in England there has been added the guardian by appointment of the High Court of Justice, appointed by that court, as where the father fails to appoint a testamentary guardian. Natural guardian is used to denote the father or mother acting as guardian; — a term not in technical legal usage, but popularly used as implying general parental authority.

tropical cæsalpiniaceous shrubs having pinnate leaves with hooked prickles, small racemose flowers, and large prickly pods inclosing polished whitish beanlike seeds. These, esp. those of G. crista, are the kind of sea beans known as bonduc, or nicker, nuts. The bark is used medicinally. The genus is united by some botanists with Cæsalpinia.

guild, gild (gĭld), n. [ME. gilde, Icel. gildi guild, payment, tribute, akin to AS. gild, gield, geld, tribute, a society or company where payment was made for its charge and support, fr. AS. gildan, geldan, to pay. See YIELD, v. t.] 1. An association of men belonging to the same class, or engaged in kindred pursuits, or with certain common interests or aims, formed for mutual aid and protection or for carrying out a common purpose.

2. Orig., one of various medieval associations, the earliest of which (those existing in England before the Conquest, 1066), besides having certain social features, were of a semireligious nature, providing payment for masses for the souls of the dead, the payment of wergild, etc. From these developed later purely religious brotherhoods, and also others purely secular, including merchant guilds, municipal corporations, and later trade guilds. The main object of the merchant guild was the maintenance of privileges already granted, such as monopolies, freedom from tolls, etc. These guilds became in many cases the governing bodies of the borough, and often evolved courts of justice. The merchant guilds appear in England after the Conquest, but correspond to Continental ones of earlier date. The medieval trade guilds (by some traced to the Roman collegia) became prominent in England in the 14th century; but the surviving organizations, such as the Livery companies of London, retain but little of their former character, and are now seldom called guilds.

3. Any of various modern associations, societies, or brotherhoods, more or less closely resembling the medieval guilds in their aims or characters; as, a guild for charitable or missionary work; hence, any fellowship or society.

4. The place where a guild met; a guildhall. Obs.

5. Phytogeog. An ecological group of plants distinguished by a special mode of life from the ordinary herbs, shrubs, and trees, which form plant societies. The four recognized guilds are the saprophytes, parasites, epiphytes, and lianas. The species of each of these, though morphologically unrelated, have similar physiological requirements, and are more or less dependent on other plants for existence.

guild merchant. = MERCHANT GUILD.

guil'le-mot (gĭl'ẽ-mŏt), n. [F., fr. the personal name Guillaume William.] Any of certain auks having a comparatively narrow bill, inhabiting northern seas. They constitute the genera Uria, whose species are called murres, and Cepphus, which contains the smaller forms, called black guillemots, as their summer plumage is mostly black. Their skins, feathers, and eggs (laid on rocky cliffs) are important to the natives of the northern coasts. The principal North Atlantic forms are the common, or foolish, guillemot or murre (U. troile), the thick-billed, or Brünnich's, guillemot or murre (U. lomvia), and the common black guillemot (Cepphus grylle).

guil-loche' (gĭl-lōsh'), n. [F guillochis; perh. fr. a proper name.] 1. Arch. An ornament in the form of two or more bands or strings twisted over each other in a series, leaving circular openings which are filled with round ornaments.

2. Hence, any pattern made by interlacing curved lines.

guil'lo-tine (gĭl'ō-tēn; 277), n. [F., after J. I. Guillotin (1738–1814), a French physician, who proposed, in the Constituent Assembly of 1789, to abolish decapitation with the ax or sword. The instrument was invented by Dr. Antoine Louis, and was called at first Louison or Louisette. Similar machines, however, were known earlier.] 1. A machine for beheading persons by means of a heavy ax or blade, sliding in vertical guides.

2. A machine or instrument, as a kind of paper cutter, resembling in its action a guillotine.

gulf, v. i. To swirl like a gulf, or eddy. Obs.

Gulf Stream. Geog. The warm ocean current of the North Atlantic. It originates in the westward equatorial current, due to the trade winds, is deflected northward by the coast of South America into the Gulf of Mexico; issuing thence, it follows approximately the coast of North America to the island of Nantucket, where it is deflected more to the eastward. Its influence is felt as far as Norway. Where it issues from the Gulf of Mexico, its velocity is more than four miles per hour, but in much of the northern part of the Atlantic its velocity is only 10 to 15 miles per day, and it is detected chiefly by its temperature, life, color, etc. Since the current is warmer than the surrounding water in the higher latitudes, the air of the prevailing westerly winds is warmer as it passes over the current, and this air, carrying much moisture, blows over to the coast of northern Europe, where it raises the temperature along the coast in winter and also causes abundant precipitation. The effect of the Gulf Stream on the summer climate is less considerable. Much of the climatic effect usually ascribed to the Gulf Stream is really due to the ocean, not to the stream itself.

gulf'weed' (gŭlf'wēd'), n. A branching olive-brown seaweed (Sargassum bacciferum), having numerous berrylike air vessels, and occurring in tropical American seas, whence masses of it drift into the Gulf Stream; also, any of several similar species of Sargassum.

gull, n. [Of Celtic origin: cf. Corn. gullan, gwlan, W. gwylan, Bret. gwelan.] In a broad sense, any of numerous long-winged, web-footed aquatic birds which constitute the family Laridæ; in the strictest sense, a member of the genus Larus or closely allied genera (which are often made a subfamily, Larinæ), thus excluding the terns and jaegers (see these terms). The typical gulls differ from their nearest allies, the terns, in their usually larger size, stouter build, thicker bill, somewhat hooked at the tip, less pointed wings, and short unforked tail. Though strong fliers, they usually remain near land. Many frequent inland waters as well as the sea. They feed on fish offal, etc., and are useful as scavengers about harbors. The different species vary greatly in size, but are generally white in adult plumage with the back and upper surface of the wings some shade of gray, varying in different species from a light pearl to nearly black, the primaries generally being black near the ends. Some forms have a black hood in the breeding season. The young are usually darker, often with dusky streaks. See BLACK-BACKED GULL, BLACK-HEADED GULL, HERRING GULL, KITTIWAKE.

Herring Gull (Larus argentatus), in winter plumage. 1/12

gum, v. t.; GUMMED (gŭmd); GUM'MING. To enlarge the spaces between the teeth of (a worn saw). See GUMMER.

gum, n. [ME. gomme, gumme, F. gomme, L. gummi and commis, fr. Gr. κομμι, prob. fr. an Egypt. form kamī; cf. It. gomma.] 1. a Any of a number of amorphous, tasteless substances, exuded in most cases by plants, and hardening on exposure to the air. Their chief constituents are certain carbohydrates, as arabic acid, bassorin, etc. Some (true gums) form clear solutions with water, while others (vegetable mucilages) swell up in water into a glutinous mass. All are insoluble in alcohol. They may be true secretions, or transformation products of cellulose, as in cherry gum, etc. b Loosely, any of various plant exudations, including the gums proper, resins, gum resins, etc. 2. A natural gum prepared for industrial or other use, as formerly for embalming. 3. A substance resembling a natural gum, as the secretion that forms in the corners of the eyes. 4. Short for CHEWING GUM, GUM ELASTIC, GUM TREE. 5. A rubber overshoe. Local, U. S. 6. A hive made of a section of a hollow gum tree; hence, any roughly made hive; also, a vessel or bin made of a hollow log. Southern U. S.

gum, v. t. 1. To smear or treat with gum; to close with gum; to unite or stiffen by gum or a gumlike substance; to make sticky with a gumlike substance.

He frets like a gummed velvet. Shak.

2. To humbug; trick; cheat. Slang, U. S.

gum, v. i. To exude or form gum; to become gummy.

gum ar'a-bic. A gum obtained from either of two species of Acacia (A. senegal and A. scorpioides). The purest varieties are nearly white or colorless and transparent; they occur in commerce under various names, as Turkey gum, Egyptian gum, etc., and are obtained chiefly from Egypt and the Sudan. The inferior varieties, as Gedda gum, Mecca gum, India gum, etc., vary from yellowish to brownish red. Gum arabic consists essentially of salts of arabic acid; it is used in calico printing, in the manufacture of mucilage, blacking, etc., in confectionery, and in medicine as a demulcent.

gum'bo (gŭm'bō), n. Also gom'bo. [Of African origin; cf. kingombo in Angola, the okra.] 1. A soup thickened with the mucilaginous pods of the okra; okra soup. 2. The okra plant or its pods. 3. Gumbo soil. See GUMBO, a. 4. [Perh. fr. Kongo nkombo runaway slaves; hence, language of slaves.] A patois used by negroes and creoles in the French West Indies, Louisiana, etc.

gum'bo, a. Lit., of or pertaining to gumbo; consisting of, or like, gumbo; — specif. applied, esp. in the western United States, to a class of peculiar, fine-grained, silty soils, which are usually devoid of true sand, but rich in alkaline compounds, and which when saturated with water become impervious and soapy or waxy in appearance and to the touch. Local, U. S.

gum'boil' (gŭm'boil'), n. A small abscess on the gums.

gum'bo lim'bo (gŭm'bō lĭm'bō). [Prob. of negro origin.] a A small West Indian tree (Terebinthus simaruba), yielding the aromatic resin cachibou. b A simaroubaceous tree of southern Florida (Simarouba glauca).

gum'dig'ger (gŭm'dĭg'ẽr), n. One whose occupation is to dig the fossil resin of the kauri pine, which is used in the manufacture of varnish. New Zealand. — gum'dig'ging (-ĭng), n.

gum'drop' (gŭm'drŏp'), n. A confection of sweetened gum arabic or other glutinous substance, as gelatin, made in drops or small molds.

gum elastic. 1. = CAOUTCHOUC. 2. A small sapotaceous tree of the southern United States (Bumelia lanuginosa).

gum'ma (gŭm'ȧ), n.; pl. -MATA (-tȧ). [NL. So called from its gummy contents. See GUM.] Med. A kind of soft tumor, of syphilitic origin. — gum'ma-tous (-tŭs), a.

gum plant. Any asteraceous plant of the genus Grindelia; — so called from the gummy coating of the foliage.

gump'tion (gŭmp'shŭn), n. 1. Shrewdness; common sense; cleverness. Colloq. "One does not have gumption till one has been properly cheated." Lord Lytton.

2. Paint. a Art of preparing colors. b Megilp.

gum rash. Med. Strophulus in a teething child, red gum.

gum resin. A product consisting essentially of a mixture of gum and resin, usually obtained by making an incision in a plant and allowing the juice which exudes to solidify by evaporation. Gum resins are, in accordance with their composition, partially soluble in water and partially soluble in alcohol. Some substances commonly called gums are gum resins. They usually originate as excretion products in special canals or glands. — gum'-res'in-ous, a.

gum succory. a A cichoriaceous weed (Chondrilla juncea) with large pinnatifid basal leaves and branching wiry stems bearing numerous small heads of yellow-rayed flowers; also, its resinous exudate. b A European wild lettuce (Lactuca perennis).

gum tree. 1. In the United States, any of several unrelated gum-yielding trees, as: a The sour gum (Nyssa). b The sweet gum (Liquidambar styraciflua).

2. In Australia, any tree of the genus Eucalyptus; — often with descriptive adjective, as blue, white, gray, or red gum.

3. In the West Indies, any of several laticiferous trees, as Rhus metopium, Sapium laurifolium, etc.

gum'wood' (gŭm'wo͝od'), n. a The wood of any Australian gum tree. b An asteraceous shrub (Commidendron rugosum) endemic on the island of St. Helena.

gun (gŭn), n. [ME. gonne, gunne; of uncertain origin; possibly from some personal name; cf. the names given to swords.] 1. A piece of ordnance on a carriage or other mounting for throwing projectiles by the force of some explosive, as gunpowder, consisting of a tube or barrel closed at one end, where the projectile is placed, with an explosive charge behind, which is ignited in various ways; a piece of ordnance; a cannon. This is the present military sense, as well as the original sense, of the word. Gun is sometimes used in speaking of ordnance to distinguish a cannon having the length of the bore relatively great in comparison to the caliber and designed for direct fire, with high velocity and great range or penetration, from a howitzer or a mortar (which see). Cf. CANNON.

2. a A ballistic engine of war like the catapult or mangonel. Obs. b A missile from a gun. Obs.

3. Any portable firearm except a pistol or revolver, such as a rifle, shotgun, carbine, etc. This is the popular sense, but in military usage all portable firearms are called small arms, gun being reserved for a piece of ordnance.

4. Any similar tubular device for throwing a projectile, as by the expansive force of compressed air; — usually with a limiting word; as, air gun, spring gun.

5. A discharge of a cannon in a salute, as a signal, or the like; as, a salute of seventeen guns; the evening gun.

6. A revolver or pistol. Western U. S. or Colloq.

gun'boat' (gŭn'bōt'), n. Nav. An armed vessel of light draft. See NAVY, 2.

gun breech. Ordnance. The mass of metal at the rear end of a cannon, extending from the rear face to the rifling. It does not include the breech mechanism.

gun'bright' (gŭn'brīt'), n. The common scouring rush (Equisetum hyemale), sometimes used in cleaning guns.

gun captain. Nav. A petty officer in command of the crew of a gun. In the United States navy he is appointed by the ship's commanding officer and has not necessarily rank when not at his gun.

gun carriage. Ordnance. The mechanism upon which a gun is mounted for maneuvering, firing, and, in some cases, for transportation, the general character being determined by the service in which the gun is employed. Coast-artillery gun carriages are classified, according to the nature of the cover afforded by the emplacement, as barbette (either disappearing or nondisappearing), casemate, or turret, carriages. See Illusts. of DISAPPEARING CARRIAGE, FIELDPIECE, HOWITZER, MORTAR.

gun chamber. That part of a gun which receives the charge, esp in one using fixed ammunition.

gun circle. A metal track, circular or on an arc of a circle, upon which a pivot gun revolves on rollers.

gun'cot'ton (gŭn'kŏt'n), n. A substance of variable composition, obtained by soaking cotton in a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acids, in its original state closely resembling ordinary cotton in appearance, but distinguished by its inflammable and explosive qualities; specif., cellulose hexanitrate. The effect of the acid upon the cotton is to produce a series of cellulose nitrates, the highest and most explosive member of which may be represented by the formula $C_{12}H_{14}O_4(NO_3)_6$, and is hence called cellulose hexanitrate, though it is sometimes represented as trinitrate, $C_6H_7O_2(NO_3)_3$. In accordance with the first usage the lower members are called respectively the pentanitrate, tetranitrate, trinitrate, and dinitrate. They are distinguished from the hexanitrate not only by decreasing rapidity of combustion, but also by their solubility in alcohol and ether. Mixtures of them constitute the soluble gun-cotton used in the preparation of collodion, celluloid, varnishes, artificial silk, etc. For explosives, on the other hand, the cotton is treated with stronger acid so as to produce the higher nitrates, esp. the hexanitrate. It is then prepared, while still wet with the wash water, by pulping, compressing, and fashioning into disks, blocks, etc., or by gelatinizing it with acetone or other agent, and forming it into hornlike flakes, cords, or the like. Practically all the smokeless powders consist of guncotton, either alone or mixed with other ingredients, of which the most important is nitroglycerin. Guncotton explodes by ignition only when in large quantities or when confined, but when unconfined may be exploded by detonation. Its explosion differs chemically from that of gunpowder, in being a recombination of the elements of a compound instead of a reaction between different ingredients of a mixture. There is no smoke and no fouling, but the poisonous carbon monoxide generated has caused death in mines.

gun deck. Nav. a In old-time war vessels, a deck below the spar deck, on which guns were carried. If there were two, the upper one was called the main deck, the lower one, the lower gun deck. If there were three, the middle one was called the middle gun deck. b In modern war vessels, the deck carrying guns next below the main deck.

gun'fire' (gŭn'fīr'), n. Mil. & Nav. a The firing of a gun, as the morning gun, or the time of firing. b Chiefly Mil Use of artillery, rifles, etc., as weapons of war, as distinguished from the use of the bayonet, sword, torpedoes, etc., and esp. as distinguished from shock tactics or the charge.

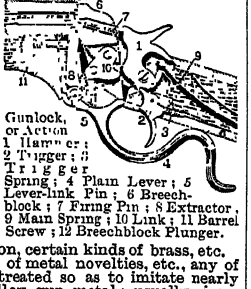
gun'flint' (-flĭnt'), n. A small, sharp flint for use in a flintlock, to produce a spark of fire to ignite the priming.

gun iron. Cast iron of extraordinary strength, prepared by melting in an air furnace instead of the cupola.

gun'lock' (gŭn'lŏk'), n. The mechanism attached to some firearms by which the charge is ignited. In most modern small arms the parts which perform this function are not assembled in a separate mechanism, and in such cases are specifically called the action. See FLINTLOCK, MATCHLOCK, PERCUSSION LOCK, WHEEL LOCK.



Gunlock, or Action

gun'pow'der (gŭn'pou'dẽr), n. 1. A black or brown explosive substance, consisting of an intimate mechanical mixture of saltpeter, charcoal, and sulphur, used in gunnery and blasting. It consists of from 70 to 80 per cent of saltpeter, with 10 to 15 per cent of each of the other ingredients. Its explosive energy is due to the fact that it contains the necessary amount of oxygen for its own combustion, and liberates smoky gases (chiefly nitrogen and carbon dioxide), which occupy a thousand or fifteen hundred times more space than the powder which generated them. It is manufactured in grains of various sizes for different uses, and also in special forms, known as hexagonal, prismatic, etc. For many kinds of firearms it is being superseded by smokeless powders. Gunpowder is believed to have been invented at some remote time by the Chinese, and to have found its way into Europe much later. Its use in warfare was well known in the 14th century.

2. Any of the various powders used in guns as propelling charges; as, smokeless gunpowder. See SMOKELESS POWDER.

gy-n a n'dro-phore (-fōr), n. [gyno- + androphore.] Bot. = GONOPHORE.

gy-nan'dro-spo'rous, a. [gyno- + andro- + -sporous.] Bot. Bearing androspores on or near the oögonium, as some algæ.

gy-nan'ther-ous (jĭ-năn'thẽr-ŭs; jī-), a. [gyno- + anther.] Bot. Having stamens abnormally converted into pistils.

gyn'e-col'a-try (jĭn'ē-kŏl'ȧ-trĭ; jĭ'nē-), gyn'æ-col'a-try, n. [gyneco- + -latry.] Gyneolatry.

gyn'e-co-ma'ni-a, or gyn'æ- (jĭn'ē-kō-mā'nĭ-ȧ; jĭ-nē'kō-), n. [NL., fr. Gr. γυναικομανία; γυνή, γυναικός, woman + μανία madness.] Med. Satyriasis.

gyn'e-cop'a-thy, or gyn'æ- (jĭn'ē-kŏp'ȧ-thĭ; jĭ'nē-), n. [gyneco- + -pathy.] Any disease peculiar to women. — gyn'e-co-path'ic, gyn'æ-co-path'ic (jĭn'ē-kō-păth'ĭk; jĭ-nē'-), a.

gy-n e'c e-p h o r e, or gy-næ'- (jĭ-nē'kē-fōr; jī-), n. [Gr. γυναικεῖον gynœceum + φέρειν to bear.] Zool. A ventral canal or groove, in which some trematode males carry the female. — gy-ne'co-phor'ic (-fŏr'ĭk), a — gyn'e-coph'o-rous (jĭn'ē-kŏf'ō-rŭs; jĭ'nē-), or gyn'æ-, a.

gyn'e-oc'ra-cy, gyn'æ-oc'ra-cy (-ŏk'rȧ-sĭ). Poorly formed equivs. of GYNECOCRACY.

gyn'e-pho'bi-a (-fō'bĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; gyne- + -phobia.] Morbid dread of women's society.

gyn'e-thu'si-a (-thū'zĭ-ȧ; -sĭ-ȧ), a. [NL.; gyne- + Gr. θυσία sacrifice.] Sacrifice of women. Rare.

gy-noc'ra-cy (jĭ-nŏk'rȧ-sĭ; jī-), n. Gynecocracy. See MATRIARCHY. — gyn'o-crat'ic (jĭn'ō-krăt'ĭk; jĭ'nō-), a.

gyn'o-ste'gi-um (-stē'jĭ-ŭm), n.; pl -GIA (-ȧ). [NL.; gyno- + Gr. στέγη roof.] Bot. a Any covering of the gynœcium. b A perianth.

gyour. † GUYOUR.

gyp, gip (jĭp), n. [Orig. uncert.; cf. GYPSY] 1. A college servant; — so called in Cambridge, England. Cf. SCOUT. Cant.

2. A sharper or swindler, esp. at horse trades. Slang, U. S.

Gy-pa'ë-tus (jĭ-pā'ē-tŭs), n. [NL.; Gr. γύψ vulture + ἀετός eagle.] Zool The genus consisting of the lammergeier and an allied African species.

gypon, gypoun † GIPON.

Gyps (jĭps), n [NL., fr. Gr γύψ vulture.] Zool. The genus consisting of the griffon vulture and African and Asiatic allies.

gype, gype, n. Gypsum. Obs. or R.

gyp-se'lan, gip-se'lan (jĭp-sē'-, -lăn), a. Of or pert. to gypsies. gyp'sey. Var. of GYPSY.

gyp'si-ol'o-gist, gip'si-ol'o-gist (jĭp'sĭ-ŏl'ō-jĭst), n. [gypsy + -logist.] A specialist in gypsy life and history. [Egypsum gyp'site (jĭp'sīt), n. Earthy gyp-sol'o-gy, gip-sol'o-gy (jĭp-sŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [gypsy + -logy.] The study or investigation of the manners, customs, origin, etc., of gypsies — gyp-so l'o-gist, gip-sol'o-gist (-jĭst), n.

gyp'so-plast (jĭp'sō-plăst), n. [gypsum + -plast.] A cast in plaster of Paris, in whitelime.

gyp'sous (-sŭs), a. Gypseous.

gyp'sy, gip'sy (jĭp'sĭ), v. t.; -SIED (-sĭd); -SY-ING. To play the gypsy.

gyp'sy-dom, gip'sy-dom (-dŭm), n. See -DOM gyp'sy-fy, gip'sy-fy (-fī), v. t.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY ING (-fĭ'ĭng) [gypsy + -fy.] To cause to become a gypsy; to make gypsylike. [SYWORT gypsy, or gipsy, herb. = GIP-gypsy, or gipsy, herring The pilchard. Local gyp'sy-hood, gip'sy-hood, n. See -HOOD. [-ISH.

gyp'sy-ish, gip'sy-ish, a. See gyp'sy-ism, gip'sy-ism (jĭp'sĭ-ĭz'm), n. See -ISM. [ramson gypsy, or gipsy, onion. The gypsy, or gipsy, rose. Scabious.

gyp'sy-ry, or gip'sy-ry (jĭp'sĭ-rĭ), a. [gypsy + -ry.] Gypsy grounds or quarters. Rare.

gypsy, or gipsy, wagon or wagon. A van or houselike wagon such as is used by gypsies.

gyp'sy-weed', gip'sy-weed', n. a = GYPSYWORT. b Speedwell. U. S.

gyp'sy-wort', gip'sy-wort' (jĭp'sĭ-wûrt'), n. The water operated by a crank, or by a ratchet and pawl through a lever working up and down. b A winch with a gypsy head. See GYPSY HEAD.

gy'ral (jī'răl), a. [See GYRE.] 1. Moving in a circular path or way; whirling; gyratory.
2. Anat. Pert. to a gyrus, or convolution of the brain.

gy'rate (-rāt), a. [L. gyratus made in a circular form, p. p. of gyrare.] Winding or coiled round, curved into a circle; taking a circular course.

gy'rate, v. i.; GY'RAT-ED (-rāt-ĕd); GY'RAT-ING (-rāt-ĭng). [L. gyratus, p. p. of gyrare to gyrate. See GYRE, n.] To revolve round a central point, to move spirally about an axis, as a tornado; to revolve.

gy-ra'tion (jī-rā'shŭn), n. 1. Act of turning or whirling, as around a fixed center; a circular or spiral motion; motion about an axis; rotation; revolution.

The gyrations of an ascending balloon De Quincey

2. Zoöl. One of the whorls of a spiral shell.

gy-ra'tion-al (-ăl), a. Pert. to, or marked by, gyration.

gy'ra-to-ry (jī'ră-tŏ-rĭ), a. Moving in a circle, or spirally; revolving; whirling around.

gyre (jīr), n. [L. gyrus, Gr. γῦρος.] 1. A circular motion, or a circle described by a moving body; a turn or revolution; a circuit.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres. Dryden.

2. A circular or spiral form; also, a vortex.

gyre, v. i. & t.; GYRED (jīrd); GYR'ING (jīr'ĭng). [Cf. OF. gyrer, girer. See GYRATE.] To turn round; to gyrate.

gyr'fal'con, ger'fal'con (jûr'fô'k'n; -fôl'k'n), n. [ME. gerfaucon, OF. gerfaucon, F. gerfaut, of which the first part is of G. origin; cf. OHG. gīr vulture, G. geier, akin to G. gier greed. Cf. GIER-EAGLE, FALCON.] Any of certain large falcons of the Arctic regions and cold parts of Europe, Asia, and America, which constitute the subgenus Hierofalco, as Falco rusticolus and F. islandus. They are about two feet long, and more powerful, though less active, than the peregrine falcon. Individuals vary greatly in color from very dark-colored to almost pure white with only a few dark markings, and the number of species or varieties which exist has been a subject of much controversy.

Gyrfalcon (Falco rusticolus).

☞ The spelling gerfalcon is etymologically preferable; but gyrfalcon is generally preferred in usage.

Gy-rin'i-dæ (jī-rĭn'ĭ-dē; jī-), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gyrinus, name of the genus, fr. Gr. γυρῖνος or γύρινος a tadpole, fr. γυρός round.] Zoöl. The family of aquatic beetles consisting of the whirligig beetles (which see). Gy-rī'nus (jī-rī'năs; jī-) is the typical genus, and contains the majority of the North American species.

Gy-roc'er-as (jī-rŏs'ĕr-ăs), n. [NL.; gyro- + Gr. κέρας horn.] Paleon. A genus of fossil nautiloid cephalopods having the shell in the form of a loosely coiled discoidal spiral, the different whorls not touching each other. In old classifications it included many forms now placed in other genera. — gy-roc'er-an (-ăn), a.

gy-roi'dal (jī-roi'dăl), a. [gyro- + -oid + -al.] Spiral or gyratory in arrangement or action; specif.: a Crystl. Having the planes arranged spirally, so that they incline all to the right (or left) of a vertical line; — said of certain hemihedral forms. b Optics. Rotatory.

gy'ro-mele (jī'rō-mēl), n. [NL.; gyro- + Gr. μέλη a sort of cup.] Med. An instrument used in treating stomach diseases, consisting of a rotating sponge-tipped probe.

gy'ron (jī'rŏn), n. [F. giron; of German origin. See GORE a piece of cloth.] Her. A subordinary of triangular form having one of its angles at the fess point and the opposite side at the edge of the escutcheon.

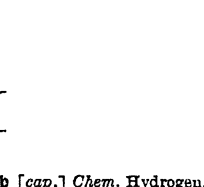
gy-ron'ny (jī-rŏn'ĭ), a. [F. gironné.] Her. Covered with gyrons, or divided in such a manner as to form several gyrons; — said of an escutcheon.

gy'ro-plane (jī'rō-plān), n. Aëronautics. A flying machine balanced and supported by rapidly rotating, horizontal or slightly inclined, planes, combining the principles of the gyroscope and aëroplane.

gy'ro-scope (-skōp), n. [F. See GYRE, -SCOPE.] An apparatus consisting essentially of a heavy-rimmed flywheel capable of rotation at great speed on a pair of bearings contained in or fastened to a piece, usually a ring or gimbals, so as to have additional freedom of movement in one or more directions. First devised by Professor W. R. Johnson, in 1832, by whom it was called the rotascope, it was used as a kind of scientific toy and to illustrate the dynamics of rotating bodies, the composition of rotations, etc. On account of the resistance the gyroscope offers to a change in the direction of its axis when rotating at high speed, the instrument will balance and gyrate in a variety of ways in apparent contradiction of the laws of gravitation. A delicately mounted form of the above apparatus, invented by M. Foucault, is used to render visible the rotation of the earth on account of the previously mentioned tendency of the rotating wheel to preserve a constant plane of rotation, independently of the earth's motion. This same principle is made use of in an instrument, invented by Dr. H. Anschütz-Kämpfe, designed to replace the mariner's compass or to serve as a check upon its accuracy. Other uses of the gyroscope are as a steering apparatus (see OTHER GEAR) and as a balancing device, as in certain flying machines and in a proposed type of monorailway.



Gyroscope.

gy'ro-scop'ic (jī'rō-skŏp'ĭk), a. Pertaining to the gyroscope; resembling the motion of the gyroscope.

gy'rose (jī'rōs), a. [See GYRE.] Bot. Marked with wavy lines; undulate or sinuate.

Gy'ro-sta'chys (jī'rō-stā'kĭs; -stăk'ĭs), n. [NL.; gyro- + Gr. στάχυς ear of grain.] Bot. A large genus of terrestrial orchids (lady's-tresses), having fleshy fibrous roots, slender stems, and small white flowers in more or less twisted spikes appearing spirally arranged. The species are widely distributed, 10 occurring in the United States.

gy'ro-stat (jī'rō-stăt), n. [gyro- + Gr. ἱστάναι to cause to stand.] Physics. A modification of the gyroscope, consisting essentially of a flywheel fixed inside a rigid case to which is attached a thin flange of metal. It is used in studying the dynamics of rotation.

gy'ro-stat'ic (-stăt'ĭk), a. Physics. Of or pert. to the gyrostat or gyrostatics. — gy'ro-stat'i-cal-ly (-ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv.

gy'ro-stat'ics (-ĭks), n. That branch of physical science which deals with the phenomena of rotating bodies, as their resistance to any change of the plane of rotation.

Gy'ro-the'ca (-thē'kä), n. [NL.; gyro- + Gr. θήκη case; — in allusion to the round fruit.] Bot. A genus of hæmodoraceous herbs constituted by G. capitata. See REDROOT.

gy'rus (jī'rŭs), n.; L. pl. GYRI (-rī). [L. See GYRE, n.] Anat. A convoluted ridge between grooves; a convolution; esp., a convolution of the brain. See BRAIN.

gyve (jīv; formerly, probably until after 1800, gīv), n. [ME. gives, gyves, pl., of uncertain origin.] A shackle, esp. one to confine the legs; a fetter.

gyve, v. t.; GYVED (jīvd); GYV'ING (jīv'ĭng). To fetter; to shackle; to chain.

H

H (āch). 1. The eighth letter of the English alphabet. H is classed with the consonants, although its sound is now generally considered by phoneticians to be mainly a breath glide formed with the oral organs in the same position as for the preceding or the following sound. Its power is that of a simple aspiration or breathing, with only enough narrowing of the glottis to produce audibility. H is combined with certain consonants to form various digraphs; as, ph (=f) rh (=r), sh, th, ŧħ, and wh, as in phase, rhetoric, shall, thing, then, when (for the sound "zh" see Guide, §§ 230, 267); also, with c to form the consonantal diphthong ch (=tsh), as in charm (written also tch, as in catch). In some words, mostly derived or introduced from foreign languages, h following c or g indicates that the c or g has its "hard" sound before e, i, or y, as in chemistry, chiromancy, chyle, Ghent, etc.; in some others, ch has the sound of sh, as in chicane. See Guide to Pron., § 176, and for the various combinations of H see the Guide under the initial letter. The name (aitch) is from the French ache, which is probably from L. ha, name of the letter H + ka, name of the letter K, these two names coming together in the grammarians' list of mutes (cf. It. acca, [Gr. ἀγά); its form is from the Latin, and this from the Greek H, which was used as the sign of the spiritus asper (rough breathing) before it came to represent the long vowel, Gr. η. The Greek H is from Phœnician, the ultimate origin perhaps being Egyptian. See ALPHABET, Illust. Etymologically H is most closely related to c; as in E. horn, L. cornu, Gr. κέρας; E. hele, v. t., conceal; E. hide, L. cutis, Gr. κύτος; E. hundred, L. centum, Gr. ἑ-κατ-ον, Skr. çata.

2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate: a The eighth in a series; eighth in class or order; sometimes, the numeral 8; as, quire h; Company H. b [cap.] Chem. Hydrogen. c See MILLER SYMBOLS. d [cap.] Physics. (1) Horizontal component of the earth's magnetism; (2) intensity of magnetic flux; (3) henry. e [cap.] Astron. A prominent Fraunhofer spectrum line produced chiefly by calcium. f Music. In German use, the note, tone, or key of B natural. See B.

3. As a medieval Roman numeral, H stood for 200; H̄, for 200,000.

4. As an abbreviation: a In the form H., Various proper names, as Helen, Henry, Horace, etc.; in the log book, heavy sea (Naut.); Law of Holiness (O. T. Criticism). b In the form h or H.: In the log book (h), hail (Naut.); harbor; hard, hardness; in wigwagging, have; height; hence; high; hour or hours; in the Shipping Register, hoy (Naut.); hundred; husband; hydrant.

H Pole.

H, or h (āch), n.; pl. H's or HS (āch'ĭz). The letter H, h, or its sound; also, something of the general shape of the letter, usually of capital H.

H, a. Of the general shape of the letter H; as, an H frame, or H-frame.

H armature, Elec., an armature of H-shaped section. — H bar. = I BAR. — H beam. = I BEAM. — H bone. = AITCHBONE. — H girder. = I GIRDER. — H hinge, a hinge with leaves that resemble the letter H when opened. — H piece, Mining, the part of a plunger pump which contains the valve. — H pole, a telegraph pole built up of two parallel poles braced together. — H sight, a rear gun sight consisting of two small uprights with a wire between them.

ha (hä), interj. An exclamation denoting surprise, joy, or grief, or sometimes mere doubt or hesitation. Both as uttered and as written, it expresses a great variety of emotions, determined by the tone or the context. When repeated, ha, ha, it is an expression of laughter, satisfaction, or triumph, sometimes derisive. — n. The sound made in uttering this exclamation.

Ha-has, and inarticulate hootings of satirical rebuke. Carlyle.

Ha-bak'kuk (hă-băk'ŭk; hăb'ă-kŭk), n. a A Hebrew prophet of unknown date. b The Book of Habakkuk. See OLD TESTAMENT.

ha'be-as cor'po-ra (hā'bē-ăs kôr'pō-rä). [L., (that) you have the bodies.] Law. In England: a A process of the Common Pleas (abolished in 1852) for compelling attendance of jurymen; in full called ‖ ha'be-as cor'po-ra ju'ra-to'rum (jōō'ra-tō'rŭm; § 243). b A process for bringing an ex-sheriff into court to account; — in full called ‖ ha'be-as cor'po-ra nu'per vi'ce-co'mi-tis (nū'pĕr vī'sē-kōm'ĭ-tĭs).

ha'be-as cor'pus (kôr'pŭs). [L., (that) you have the body.] Law. Any of several common-law writs having for their object to bring a party before a court or judge, and issued out of court or (in England) awarded by a judge in vacation; esp., the prerogative writ, more fully called ‖ ha'be-as cor'pus ad sub-ji'ci-en'dum (ăd sŭb-jĭ'shĭ-ĕn'dŭm), for inquiring into the lawfulness of the restraint of a person who is imprisoned or detained in another's custody. This writ of habeas corpus was not well established as the supreme remedy for enforcing the law of personal liberty until the passage of the Petition of Right (16 Car. I. c. 10, sec. 8), and the subsequent enactment of the Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. II. c. 2, 1679). In its widest sense habeas corpus includes, besides the foregoing, the writ commonly called capias, and certain others, more fully called: ‖ ha'be-as cor'- gy'ral-ly, adv. of GYRAL.

gyre'ful, a. See -FUL.

gyr'en-ceph'a-late (jīr'ĕn-sĕf'ă-lāt; jī'rĕn-), a. [From NL. Gyrencephala; Gr. γῦρος ring + ἐγκέφαλος the brain.] Zool Having the surface of the brain convoluted; — applied by Owen to a group, Gyr'en-ceph'a-la (-lă), comprising certain higher mammals, based on the development of this character.

gyr'en-ceph'a-lous (-lŭs), a. Zool. Gyrencephalate.

gy'ri (jī'rī), n., pl. of GYRUS.

gy-roc'er-a-cone' (jī-rŏs'ĕr-ă-kōn'), n. [Gyroceras + cone.] Paleon. A nautiloid cephalopod shell resembling the genus Gyroceras in manner of coiling.

Gy'ro-dac'ty-lus (jī'rō-dăk'tĭ-lŭs), n. [NL. See GYRO- ; -DACTYLOUS.] Zool. A genus of small monogenetic trematodes parasitic on fishes. The body has a disk bearing strong hooks and processes at the posterior end, and produces a single embryo, which in turn may develop another embryo before it leaves the body of the parent. It is the type of a family, Gy'ro-dac-tyl'i-dæ (-dăk-tĭl'ĭ-dē).

Gyr'o-dus (jī'rō-dŭs), n. [NL.; Gr. γυρός round + ὀδούς tooth.] Paleon. A genus of extinct Jurassic pycnodonts having a deep body, and rows of rounded teeth.

gy-rog'o-nite (jī-rŏg'ō-nīt; jī-), n. [gyro- + Gr. γόνος fruit.] Paleobot. The petrified fruit of a stonewort (Chara hispida).

gy-rol'dal-ly, adv of GYROIDAL.

Gy-rol'e-pis (jī-rŏl'ē-pĭs; jī-), n. [NL.; Gr. γυρός round + λεπίς scale.] Paleon. A genus of Triassic ganoid fishes having the scales marked with irregular oblique and curved rugæ.

gy'ro-lite (jī'rō-līt; jī'rō-), n. [gyro- + -lite.] Min. A hydrous calcium silicate, $H_2Ca_2Si_3O_9 \cdot H_2O$, in white concretions.

gy-ro'ma (jī-rō'mä; jī-), n. [NL., fr. Gr. γυροῦν to round, bend.] A turning round. Rare.

gy'ro-man'cy (jī'rō-măn'sĭ; jī'rō-), n. [gyro- + -mancy. cf. F. gyromancie.] Divination performed by drawing a ring or circle, and walking in or around it till the walker falls from dizziness, the prognostic being drawn from the place of the fall.

9. Familiarity or terms of familiarity ; close acquaintance ; as, on intimate habits. Obsoles.

10. Habitation. Obs. & R.

11. Logic. The category of possession. Obs.

Syn. — Rule, practice, consuetude, wont. — HABIT, CUSTOM, USAGE, HABITUDE, PRACTICE, USE, WONT. HABIT implies a settled disposition or tendency (esp. on the part of an individual) leading one to do easily, naturally, and with growing skill or certainty what one does often ; CUSTOM suggests rather the external aspects of habit (whether on the part of an individual or a community), the fact of repetition rather than the tendency to repeat ; USAGE (applying only to a considerable body of people) adds the implication of long acceptation or standing ; both custom and (esp.) usage frequently suggest a certain degree of authority (for legal uses see defs.) ; as, "How use doth breed a habit in a man!" (Shak.) ; "Her memory from old habit of the mind went slipping back upon the golden days in which she saw him first" (Tennyson) ; "It is a custom more honored in the breach than the observance" (Shak.) ; "And custom lie upon thee with a weight, heavy as frost, and deep almost as life" (Wordsworth) ; the habit of smoking, the custom of smoking after dinner ; "the . . . inveterate usages of our country, growing out of the prejudice of ages" (Burke) ; "Usages have been established in every department of the government, which have become a kind of common law" (Justice MacLean) ; "The consensus of usage determines the meaning which a word bears" (G. L. Kitredge). HABITUDE is rather more objective than habit ; USE and WONT are chiefly poetical for custom ; as, "his resentment at having his habitudes disturbed" (Mrs. Oliphant) ; "more haste than is his use" (Shak.) ; "sad beyond his wont" (Tennyson). PRACTICE, as here compared (see EXERCISE), suggests esp. habitual performance or mode of action ; it occasionally carries a somewhat sinister implication ; as, "My enemies, who come to stare at my affliction — their daily practice to afflict me more" (Milton). See USUAL, MANNER, FASHION, METHOD.

hab/it (hăb/ĭt), v. t. ; HAB/IT-ED ; HAB/IT-ING. [ME. habiten to dwell, F. habiter, fr. L. habitare to have frequently, to dwell, intens. fr. habere to have. See HABIT, n.] 1. To dress ; clothe ; array.

They habited themselves like those rural deities. Dryden

2. To inhabit. Archaic. Rom. of R.

3. To accustom ; habituate. Obs.

hab/it, v. i. To live ; abide. Obs.

hab/it-a-ble (hăb/ĭt-ä-b'l), a. [F. habitable, L. habitabilis] Capable of being inhabited ; that may be inhabited or dwelt in ; as, the habitable world ; specif., of a dwelling, reasonably fit for occupation by a tenant of the class for which it was let, or of the class ordinarily occupying such a dwelling. — hab/it-a-ble-ness, n. — hab/it-a-bly, adv.

hab/it-an-cy (hăb/ĭt-ăn-sĭ), n. 1. Residence ; inhabitancy.

In some respects, perhaps, there is a distinction between habitancy and domicil, as pointed out and explained in the case of Harvard College v Gore, 5 Pick. R. 377, the former being held to include citizenship and municipal relations. 27 Miss. (5 Cush.) 711.

2. Inhabitants collectively ; population, also, Rare, populous condition.

2. [F. pron. ä/bē/tän/] One of the settlers, or descendants of settlers, of French descent or origin in Canada or Louisiana, belonging to the farming class.

The Canadian settler scorned the name of peasant, and then, as now, was always called the habitant. Parkman.

hab/i-tat (hăb/ĭ-tăt), n. [L, it dwells, fr. habitare. See HABIT, v. t.] 1. Biol. The natural abode of a plant or animal. The word habitat often refers especially to the kind of environment in which the plant or animal occurs, as opposed to range, denoting its geographical distribution. Locality indicates the circumscribed area, and station the exact spot, in which certain individuals are found.

2. Place where anything is commonly found.

This word has its habitat in Oxfordshire Earle.

hab/i-ta/tion (-tā/shŭn), n. [F. habitation, L. habitatio.] 1. Act of inhabiting ; state of inhabiting or dwelling, or of being inhabited ; occupancy. Denham.

2. Place of abode ; settled dwelling ; residence ; house.

The Lord . . . blesseth the habitation of the just. Prov. III. 33.

3. A branch or lodge of the Primrose League in England.

4. A colony or settlement.

5. Civil Law. = HABITATIO. See SERVITUDE.

Syn. — HABITATION, DWELLING, RESIDENCE, DOMICILE, HOME are here compared in their nontechnical uses ; for legal distinctions see defs. HABITATION and DWELLING, both general terms, are now almost exclusively bookish or elevated in their connotation ; as, "My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation and sure dwellings" (Is. XXXII. 18) ; "whose dwelling is the light of setting suns" (Wordsworth). RESIDENCE denotes a settled or permanent home ; as applied to a dwelling house, it suggests a certain degree of pretension or dignity ; as, his residence is in New York ; a street of handsome residences. DOMICILE (sometimes applied to the home of animals) is rare except in its legal sense. HOME denotes a dwelling place, but connotes esp. all the range of sentiment and feeling associated with it ; as, "An English home — gray twilight poured on dewy pastures, dewy trees, softer than sleep" (Tennyson) ; "Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home" (Payne) ; "God, who is our home" (Wordsworth). Home is not a mere synonym for house. See RESIDE, INHABITANT.

habit cloth. A light, thin broadcloth, so called because riding habits are usually made of it.

hab/it-ed (hăb/ĭt-ĕd), p. a. 1. Clothed ; arrayed, dressed ; as, he was habited like a shepherd.

2. Fixed by habit ; accustomed. Obs. Fuller.

hæ'ma-cy'a-nin, or he'ma- (-sī'ə-nĭn), n. [hæma-, hema- + Gr. κύανος a dark blue substance.] Chem A colorless substance in the blood of a few arthropods and molluscs, which in contact with oxygen becomes blue by transformation into oxyhæmacyanin.

hæ'ma-cyte, or he'ma- (hē'mə-sīt, hĕm'ə-), n. [hæma-, hema- + -cyte] A blood corpuscle.

hæ'mad, he'mad (hē'măd), adv. [hæma-, hema- + 1st -ad.] Anat. Toward the hæmal side Hæ'ma-dip'sa (hē'mə-dĭp'sə; hĕm'ə-), n. [NL.; hæma- + Gr δίψα thirst] Zool. A genus of leeches belonging to the group Gnathobdellæ, and containing numerous terrestrial species of warm countries. Their bites are often troublesome.

ale, senāte cāre. ăm, account, ärm, ask, sofā; ēve, ẽvent, ĕnd, recẽnt, makẽr; īce, ĭll; ōld, ōbey, ôrb, ŏdd, sŏft, cŏnnect; ūse, ŭnite, ûrn, ŭp, circŭs, menŭ;

ratus for determining the number of corpuscles in a given quantity of blood.

hæ/mal, he/mal (hē/măl), a. [Gr. αἷμα blood.] 1. Pertaining to the blood or blood vessels.

2. Zoöl. In vertebrates, situated on, or pertaining to, the side of the spinal cord where the heart and chief blood vessels are placed; — hence often equiv. to ventral, and opposed to neural or dorsal.

hæmal, or hemal, arch, a bony or cartilaginous arch extending ventrally from the spinal column, as that formed by the ribs; esp., the series of ventrally extending bones borne by the caudal vertebræ of many fishes, reptiles, etc, and termed, from their shape, that of a Y or V, chevron bones. The canal formed by the series of these bones is the h canal, the median ventral points or processes which they bear, the h. spines. The last term has also been applied to a median ventral process of the centrum of a vertebra.

hæ/mal-bu/men, or he/mal- (hē/măl-bū/mĕn; hĕm/ăl-), n. [hæmo- + albumen.] Pharm. A preparation of blood containing iron albuminate, used in chlorosis and anæmia.

hæ/ma-mœ/ba, he/ma-me/ba (hē/mə-mē/bə; hĕm/ə-), n. [NL.; hæmo-, hemo- + amœba.] a Med. & Biol. An amœbalike organism, living in the blood, esp the malaria parasite of which this word is [cap.] a commonly applied generic name. See MALARIA. b A leucocyte.

Hæ-man/thus (hē-măn/thŭs), n. [NL.; hæmo- + -anthus] Bot. A genus of African bulbous amaryllidaceous herbs having showy, usually red, flowers, with a regular perianth, succeeded by an oblong, pulpy, berrylike fruit. The species are often cultivated under the name of bloodflower or blood lily. H. toxicarius yields an arrow poison.

hæ/ma-poi-et/ic, he/ma-poi-et/ic (hē/mə-poi-ĕt/ĭk, hĕm/ə-), a. [hæma-, hema- + -poietic] Physiol. Blood-forming; as, the hæmapoietic function of the spleen.

hæ/ma-poph/y-sis (-pŏf/ĭ-sĭs), n.; pl. -ses (-sēz). [NL. See HÆMO-; APOPHYSIS.] Zoöl. The second segment of a typical hæmal arch, represented by the sternal part of a rib or by a costal cartilage. The term has also been used in other senses, sometimes designating the chevron bones and other structures only partially or not at all homologous. — hæ/ma-po-phys/e-al (-pŏ-fĭz/ē-ăl), hæ/ma-po-phys/i-al (-ĭ-ăl), a. Also he/ma-poph/y-sis, etc.

hæ/ma-spec/tro-scope, he/ma-spec/tro-scope (-spĕk/trō-skōp), n. [hæma- + spectroscope] A direct-vision spectroscope for studying the absorption spectrum of blood.

hæ/ma-te/in, he/ma-te/in (hē/mə-tē/ĭn, hĕm/ə-), n. [See HÆMATO-.] Chem. A reddish brown or violet crystalline substance, $C_{16}H_{12}O_6$, formed from hæmatoxylin by partial oxidation, and regarded as analogous to the phthaleins. It is the essential dyestuff in logwood extracts.

hæ-mat/ic, he-mat/ic (hē-măt/ĭk), a. [Gr. αἱματικός.] 1. Of, pertaining to, containing, full of, or having the color of, blood; sanguineous; sanguine; blood-red.

2. Med. Acting on the blood hæ-mat/ic, he-mat/ic, n. A hæmatic medicine.

hæ/ma-ti-dro/sis, he/ma-ti-dro/sis (hē/mə-tĭ-drō/sĭs; hĕm/ə-), n. [NL. See HÆMATO-, HIDROSIS.] Med. The excretion of bloody perspiration.

hæ/ma-tin, he/ma-tin (hē/mə-tĭn; hĕm/ə- ; 277), n. [Gr. αἷμα, αἵματος, blood.] a Hæmatoxylin. Obs. b A bluish black, amorphous substance containing iron (perhaps $C_{32}H_{33}O_3N_4Fe$), formed by decomposition of hæmoglobin.

hæ/ma-tin/ic, he/ma-tin/ic (-tĭn/ĭk), n. [From HÆMATIN.] Med. Any substance, such as an iron salt or organic compound containing iron, which when ingested tends to increase the hæmoglobin contents of the blood; a hæmatic.

hæ/ma-tin-om/e-ter, or he/ma- (-tĭn-ŏm/ē-tēr), n. [hæmatin + -meter.] Physiol. An instrument for estimating by colorimetry the hæmoglobin in the blood. — hæ/ma-tin/o-met/ric (-tĭn/ō-mĕt/rĭk), a.

hæ-mat/i-non (hē-măt/ĭ-nŏn) } n. [L. haematinus bloodhæ-mat/i-num (hē-măt/ĭ-nŭm) } red, Gr. αἱματίνος of blood, fr. Gr. αἷμα blood.] A hard opaque glass, of a beautiful red color which disappears on melting, used by the ancients in enamels, mosaics, etc.; also, an imitation of this, composed of silica, lime, borax, soda, copper oxide, etc.

hæm/a-to-, hem/a-to- (hĕm/ă-tō-; hĕ/mă-tō-; 277). Combining form from Greek αἷμα, αἵματος, blood. See HÆMO-.

hæm/a-to-chy-lu/ri-a, hem/a-to-chy-lu/ri-a (-kĭ-lū/rĭ-ə), n. [NL.; hæmato- + chylo- + -uria.] Med. Passage of blood and fatty matter in the urine, as in filariasis.

hæm/a-to-crit/, hem/a-to-crit/ (hĕm/ă-tō-krĭt/ ; hē/mă-), n. Also hæmatokrit, etc. [hæmato-, hemato- + Gr. κριτής judge.] Physiol. An instrument for determining the relative amounts of plasma and corpuscles in blood, generally some form of centrifugal apparatus.

hæm/a-to-cyst/, hem/a-to-cyst/ (-sĭst/), n. [hæmato-, hemato- + cyst.] Med. A cyst containing blood.

hæm/a-to-cy-tu/ri-a, hem/a-to-cy-tu/ri-a (-sī-tū/rĭ-ə), n. [NL.; hæmato-, hemato- + cyto- + -uria.] Med. The presence of blood corpuscles in the urine.

hæm/a-to-gen, hem/a-to-gen (hĕm/ă-tō-jĕn ; hē/mă-), n. [hæmato- + -gen.] 1. Physiol. Chem. A pseudonuclein obtained by peptic digestion of vitellin. It contains iron, and possibly is a parent substance of hæmoglobin.

2. Med. Any of several preparations, as a liquid one of ferric citrate, acetic acid, and albumin, used in the treatment of anæmia and other blood disorders.

hæm/a-to-gen/e-sis, hem/a-to-gen/e-sis (-jĕn/ĕ-sĭs), n. [hæmato- + -genesis.] Physiol. The formation of blood. — hæm/a-to-ge-net/ic, hem/a-to-ge-net/ic (-jē-nĕt/ĭk), a. — hæm/a-to-gen/ic, hem/a-to-gen/ic (-jĕn/ĭk), a.

hæ/ma-tog/e-nous, he/ma-tog/e-nous (hē/mə-tŏj/ĕ-nŭs ; hĕm/ə-), a. Physiol. Originating in the blood.

hæ/ma-toid, he/ma-toid (hē/mə-toid ; hĕm/ə-), a. [hæmato-, hemato- + -oid.] Physiol. Resembling blood.

hæ/ma-tol/y-sis, he/ma-tol/y-sis (-tŏl/ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.; hæmato- + -lysis.] Physiol. Dissolution of the red blood corpuscles with diminished coagulability of the blood; hæmolysis.—hæm/a-to-lyt/ic, hem/a-to-lyt/ic (-tō-lĭt/ĭk), a.

hæ/ma-to/ma, he/ma-to/ma (-tō/mə), n.; L. pl. -tomata (-tō/mə-tə). [NL.; hæmato- + -oma.] Med. A circumscribed swelling or tumor due to effusion of blood beneath the skin.

hæm/a-to-me/tra, hem/a-to-me/tra (hĕm/ă-tō-mē/trə ; hē/mă-tō-), n. [NL.; hæmato- + Gr μήτρα womb.] Med. An accumulation of blood or menstrual fluid in the uterus.

hæm/a-to-my-e/li-a, hem/a-to-my-e/li-a (-mī-ē/lĭ-ə), n. [NL.; hæmato-, hemato- + myelo- + -ia.] Med. An effusion of blood into the spinal cord.

hæm/a-to-my/e-li/tis, hem/a-to-my/e-li/tis (-mī/ĕ-lī/tĭs), n. [NL.; hæmato-, hemato- + myelitis.] Med. Myelitis associated with hemorrhage into the spinal cord.

hæm/a-to-pho/bi-a, hem/a-to-pho/bi-a (-fō/bĭ-ə), n. [NL.; hæmato-, hemato- + -phobia.] Med. Morbid dread of the sight of blood; hæmophobia.

hæm/a-to-por/phy-rin, or hem/a-to- (-pōr/fĭ-rĭn), n. [hæmato-, hemato- + Gr. πορφύρα purple.] Physiol. Chem. An iron-free substance obtained in amorphous brown flakes by decomposition of hæmatin. It is found in the integuments of certain lower animals and, in traces, in human urine.

hæm/a-tor-rha/chis, hem/a-tor-rha/chis (hĕm/ă-tō-rā/kĭs ; hē/mə-), n. [NL. See HÆMATO-; RACHIS.] Hemorrhage into the spinal canal.

hæm/a-tor-rhœ/a, hem/a-tor-rhe/a (-rē/ə), n. [NL.; hæmato- + -rhea.] Med. A bloody discharge or flow.

hæ/ma-tose, he/ma-tose (hē/mə-tōs ; hĕm/ə-tōs ; 277), a. [hæmato-, hemato- + -ose.] Med. Full of blood, bloody.

hæ/ma-to/sis, he/ma-to/sis (hē/mə-tō/sĭs ; hĕm/ə-), n. [NL., fr Gr. αἱμάτωσις, fr. αἱματόειν to change into blood.] Physiol. a Formation of blood; hæmatopoiesis. b Arterialization of the blood in the lungs; aëration of the blood.

hæm/a-to-sal/pinx, or hem/a-to-, n. [NL.; hæmato-, hemato- + salpinx.] Med. Accumulation of blood in the Fallopian tube.

hæm/a-to-scope/, or hem/a-to-, n. Physiol. A hæmoscope.

hæm/a-to-sep/sis, or hem/a-to-, n. [NL.; hæmato-, hemato- + sepsis.] = SEPTICÆMIA.

hæ/ma-to/sin, or he/ma- (hē/mə-tō/sĭn ; hĕm/ə-). n. Chem. The hæmatin from blood. Rare.

hæm/a-to-ther/a-py, or hem/a-to- (hĕm/ă-tō-thĕr/ă-pĭ ; hē/mə-tō-) = HÆMATHERAPY.

Hæm/a-to-ther/ma (-thûr/mə), n. pl. [NL.; hæmato- + Gr. θερμός warm.] Zoöl. A group consisting of the warm-blooded vertebrates (birds and mammals).

hæm/a-to-ther/mal, or hem/a-to- (hĕm/ă-tō-thûr/măl), a. Zoöl. Warm-blooded.

hæm/a-to-tho/rax, or hem/a-to-, = HÆMOTHORAX.

hæm/a-to-tox/ic, or hem/a-to-, a. = HÆMATOXIC. [TOZOÖN.

hæm/a-to-zo/a, n., pl. of HÆMAhæm/a-to-zoön. Zoöl. An hæmatozoön.

hæm/a-to-zo/on, n.; pl. -zoa (-ə). [NL.; hæmato- + zoon.] Zoöl. Any parasite inhabiting the blood, as worms of the genera Filaria, Bilharzia, etc., and the malaria parasite. — hæm/a-to-zo/ic, a.

hæm/a-to-zy-mot/ic, or hem/a-to-, a. [hæmato- + zymotic.] Of or pert. to a zymosis of the blood.

hæ-mat/u-re/sis, he-mat/u-re/sis (hē-măt/ū-rē/sĭs), n. [NL.; hæmato- + uresis.] Hæmaturia.

hæ-mau/to-gram, or he-mau/- (hē-mô/tō-grăm ; hĕm-ô/-), n. [hæmo-, hemo- + auto- + -gram.] A hæmautograph.

hæ/me-ryth/rin (hē/mē-rĭth/rĭn ; hĕm/ē-), n. = HÆMOERYTHRIN. [ÆMIA.

-hæ/mi-a (-hē/mĭ-ə) Var. of hæ/mi-dro/sis, or he/mi-dro/sis (hē/mĭ-drō/sĭs ; hĕ/mĭ-), = HÆMATIDROSIS.

hæ/mo-chrome, he/mo-chrome (hē/mō-krōm ; hĕm/ō-), n. = HÆMOCHROME.

hæ/mo-chro/mo-gen, or he/mo- (-krō/mō-jĕn), n. [hæmochrome + -gen.] Chem. A substance regarded as the chromogenic component of hæmoglobin.

hæ/mo-chro-mom/e-ter, or he/mo- (-krō-mŏm/ē-tēr), n. [hæmochrome + meter.] A hæmatinometer = hæ/mo-chro-mom/e-ter, or he/mo- (-krĭ-).

hæ/mo-cœle, or he/mo- (hē/mō-sēl ; hĕ/mō-), n. Zoöl. See CŒLOM. — hæ/mo-cœ/lic, or he/mo- (-sĕ/lĭk), a.

hæ/mo-crys/tal-lin, or he/mo- (-krĭs/tăl-ĭn), n. Hæmoglobin.

hæ/mo-cy/a-nin, hæ/mo-cyte. = HÆMACYANIN, HÆMACYTE.

hæ/mo-cy-tol/y-sis, or he/mo- (hē/mō-sī-tŏl/ĭ-sĭs ; hĕm/ō-), n. [NL.; hæmo- + cyto- + -lysis.] See HÆMOCYTOTRYPSIS.

hæ/mo-cy-tom/e-ter, hæ/mo-drom/o-graph, n. Also he/mo-. = HÆMACYTOMETER, HÆMADROMOGRAPH.

hæ/mo-dro-mom/e-ter, or he/mo- (hē/mō-drō-mŏm/ē-tēr ; hĕm/ō-), n. A hæmadrometer.

hæ/mo-dy-nam/e-ter (-dĭ-năm/ē-tēr ; -dī-), hæ/mo-dy-nam/ics, n. Also he/mo-. = HÆMADYNAMETER, HÆMADYNAMICS.

hæ/mo-e-ryth/rin, or he/mo- (hē/mō-ē-rĭth/rĭn ; hĕm/ō-), n. [hæmo-, hemo- + erythro- + -in.] Physiol. Chem. A red pigment present in the blood of worms and other invertebrates, corresponding to hæmoglobin.

hæ/mo-gen/e-sis, or he/mo-, n. = HÆMATOGENESIS.

hæ/mo-glo/bin-æ/mi-a, he/mo-glo/bin-e/mi-a, n. [NL.; hæmoglobin + -æmia] Med. Morbid condition marked by presence of free hæmoglobin in the blood.

hæ/mo-glo/bin-if/er-ous, or he/mo- (hē/mō-glō/bĭn-nĭf/ēr-ŭs ; hĕm/ō-), a. [hæmoglobin + -ferous.] Physiol. Containing or yielding hæmoglobin.

hæ/mo-glo/bin-o-cho/li-a, or he/mo- (-ō-kō/lĭ-ə), n. [hæmoglobin + Gr. χολή bile.] Presence of hæmoglobin in the bile.

hæ/mo-glo/bin-om/e-ter, or he/mo- (-ŏm/ē-tēr), n. [hæmoglobin + -meter.] Physiol. An instru-hæ/min, he/min (hē/mĭn), n. [Gr. αἷμα blood.] Physiol. Chem. Hydrochloride of hæmatin, obtained in the form of reddish brown, microscopic, prismatic crystals (Teichmann's crystals) by the action on blood of hydrochloric acid or of strong acetic acid and common salt. The obtaining of these crystals, from old blood clots or suspected stains, is one of the best evidences of the presence of blood.

hæ/mo- (hē/mō- ; hĕm/ō- ; 277), hæm-, hæma-, hæmat-, hæmato-. Also he/mo-, hem-, hema-, hemat-, hemato-.

with oxygen, as in arterial blood, it is distinguished as oxy-hæmoglobin, which has a brighter color. Hæmoglobin forms stable compounds with carbon monoxide and nitric oxide.

hæ'mo-glo'bi-nu'ri-a, he'mo-glo'bi-nu'ri-a (hē'mō-glō'-bĭ-nū'rĭ-ā; hĕm'ō-), n. [NL.; hæmoglobin + -uria.] a Med. The presence of hæmoglobin in the urine. It is due to excessive destruction of the red blood corpuscles in the circulating blood, and occurs in septicæmia, malarial fevers, and various forms of poisoning. b Veter. Azotemia, a disease of the horse in which the above symptom occurs. — hæ'mo-glo'bi-nu'ric, or he'mo- (-rĭk), a.

hæ'moid, he'moid (hē'moid), a. [hæmo-, hemo- + -oid; cf. Gr. αἱμοειδής.] Physiol. Resembling blood; hæmatoid.

hæ'mol, he'mol (hē'mŏl; -mōl), n. [Gr. αἷμα blood.] Pharm. A dark brown powder containing iron, prepared by the action of zinc dust as a reducing agent upon the coloring matter of the blood, and used as a hæmatinic.

hæ'mo-ly'sin, he'mo-ly'sin (hē'mō-lĭ'sĭn; hĕm'ō-), n. [hæmo-, hemo- + lysin.] Physiol. Chem. A substance developed in the blood serum, capable of destroying red corpuscles, esp. those from another animal. If the other animal is of the same species the substance is called an isolysin or homolysin; if of a different species, a heterolysin. See SIDE-CHAIN THEORY.

hæ'mo-ny (hē'mō-nĭ), n. [Cf. L. Hæmonia a name of Thessaly, the land of magic.] A plant described by Milton as "of sovereign use against all enchantments."

hæ'mo-phil'i-a, he'mo-phil'i-a (hē'mō-fĭl'ĭ-ā; hĕm'ō-), n. [NL.; hæmo-, hemo- + -phil + -ia.] Med. A condition, usually hereditary, characterized by a tendency to profuse and uncontrollable hemorrhage even from the slightest wounds. — hæ'mo-phil'ic, he'mo-phil'ic (-ĭk), a.

hæ'moph-thal'mi-a, he'moph-thal'mi-a (hē'mŏf-thăl'-mĭ-ā; hĕm'ŏf-), n. [NL.; hæmo-, hemo- + ophthalmia.] Med. An effusion of blood into the eye.

hæ'mo-plas-mo'di-um, or he'mo- (hē'mō-plăz-mō'dĭ-ŭm; hĕm'ō-), n. [NL.; hæmo- + plasmodium.] Med. & Zool. A protozoan parasite living in the blood, as the malaria parasite.

hæ-mop'ty-sis, he-mop'ty-sis (hē-mŏp'tĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.; hæmo-, hemo- + Gr. πτύειν to spit.] Med. Expectoration of blood, due usually to hemorrhage of the lungs.

hæm'or-rhage (hĕm'ō-rāj), n. A discharge of blood. See HEMORRHAGE. — hæm'or-rhag'ic (-răj'ĭk), a.

hæ'mo-scope, he'mo-scope (hē'mō-skōp; hĕm'ō-), n. [hæmo-, hemo- + -scope.] Physiol. An instrument for regulating and measuring the thickness of a layer of blood for spectroscopic examination.

hæ'mo-si-de'rin, he'mo-si-de'rin (hē'mō-sĭ-dē'rĭn; hĕm'ō-), n. [hæmo-, hemo- + Gr. σίδηρος iron.] Physiol. Chem. A pigment containing iron, derived from hæmoglobin during decomposition of blood.

hæ'mo-sid'er-o'sis, he'mo-sid'er-o'sis (-sĭd'ēr-ō'sĭs), n. [NL.; hæmosiderin, hemo- + -osis.] Med. A condition marked by the deposit of hæmosiderin in the liver, occurring in certain blood diseases due to extensive destruction of red blood corpuscles, as in pernicious anæmia.

hæ'mo-spa'si-a, he'mo-spa'si-a (-spā'zhĭ-ā; -sĭ-ā), n. [NL.; hæmo-, hemo- + Gr. σπᾶν to draw.] Med. The drawing of blood to a part, as by cupping.

hæ'mo-spas'tic, he'mo-spas'tic (-spăs'tĭk), a. [hæmo-, hemo- + Gr. σπαστικός drawing, absorbing.] Med. Pert. to, or effecting, hæmospasia. — n. A hæmospastic agent.

Hæ'mo-spo-rid'i-a (-spō-rĭd'ĭ-ā), n. pl. [NL. See HÆMO-; SPORE.] Zoöl. A group of Sporozoa consisting of minute forms which at some stage of their existence inhabit the blood corpuscles of vertebrates. The malaria parasite is an example, and is sometimes called Hæ'mo-spo-rid'i-um (-ŭm). — hæ'mo-spo'rid (-spō'rĭd; 115), n hæ'mo-sta'si-a, he'mo-sta'si-a (-stā'zhĭ-ā; -sĭ-ā), hæ-mos'ta-sis, he-mos'ta-sis (hē-mŏs'tā-sĭs), n. [NL.; hæmo-, hemo- + Gr. στάσις a standing still.] Med. a Stagnation of blood. b Arrest of a hemorrhage, as by the ligation of arteries.

hæ'mo-stat'ic, he'mo-stat'ic (hē'mō-stăt'ĭk; hĕm'ō-), a. [hæmo-, hemo- + Gr. στατικός causing to stand.] Med. a Of or relating to stagnation of the blood. b Serving to arrest hemorrhage, styptic. — n. A styptic agent.

hæ'mo-tho'rax, he'mo-tho'rax (-thō'răks), n. [hæmo-, hemo- + thorax.] Extravasation of blood into the pleural cavity.

hæ-mor'rho-din, he-mor'rho-din (hē-mŏr'ō-dĭn), n. [hæmo- + Gr. ῥόδον rose.] Chem. A red pigment extracted from meat by boiling with alcohol.

hæ'mor-rhoe'a (hē'mō-rō-ē'ā; hĕm'ō-). Var. of HEMORRHEA.

hæmorrhoid, n. [L. haemorrhois, -idis, Gr. αἱμορροΐς.] A serpent whose bite was fabled to cause hemorrhage. Obs.

hæm'or-rhoid. Var of HEMORRHOID. — hæm'or-rhoi'dal, a.

hæ'mo-ta-chom'e-ter, or he'mo- (hē'mō-tā-kŏm'ē-tēr; hĕm'ō-). = HÆMATACHOMETER. — hæ'mo-ta-chom'e-try, or he'mo- (-trĭ), n. = HÆMATACHOMETRY.

Hæ-mu'll-das (hē-mŭ'lĭ-dē), Hæ-mu'lon (-lŏn), Hæ-mu-lon'i-dæ (hē'mū-lŏn'ĭ-dē; hĕm'ū-), n. [NL.; Gr. αἷμα blood + οὐλα gums.] Zool. See GRUNT, 2.

hail, n. Act of hailing; a wish of health; a salutation.

> "Their puissant hail." M. Arnold.

hail fellow, or hail'-fel'low. A phrase used as an adjective, noun, or adverb, originating in the old greeting "Hail, fellow," and hence signifying intimacy or comradeship. The phrase hail fellow well met is similarly used; as, to be hail fellow well met with every one.

> Where diddest thou learn that being . . . suffered to be familiar thou shouldest wax hail fellow? Lyly.

hail'stone' (hāl'stōn'), n. [AS. hagolstān.] A single particle of ice falling from a cloud; a pellet of hail.

hail'storm' (-stôrm'), n. A storm accompanied with hail; a shower of hail.

hair (hâr), n. [ME. her, heer, hær, AS. hǣr; akin to OFries. hēr, D. & G. haar, OHG. & Icel. hār, Dan. haar, Sw. hår; cf. Lith. šasa. The E. word was confused with ME. haire haircloth, F. haire, of G. origin; cf. OHG hārra, for hārja, fr. hār hair.] 1. A slender threadlike outgrowth of an animal; esp., one of the filaments which form the characteristic coat of mammals. The hairs of mammals have a structure and manner of growth found in no other group. They are outgrowths of the epidermis only, containing neither blood vessels nor nerves, and are composed of horny substance (keratin). The root, or base, of a hair is contained in a tubular sheath (the hair follicle) formed by the downward extension of the epidermis. It is from the extreme bottom of this follicle that the hair grows, the necessary nourishment being supplied by the blood vessels in a vascular papilla extending into the follicle and a short distance into the bulb or enlarged lower extremity of the hair itself. Only the lower part of the root lives and grows, pushing out by its growth the part already formed. Hairs are usually more or less pigmented, and are composed chiefly of elongated and modified epidermal cells, covered by a cuticle of flat imbricated cells giving a more or less rough surface. Large hairs have a central medulla or pith usually containing some air. Very stiff hairs are called bristles; if stiff and sharp-pointed, as in the hedgehog, they become spines. See SKIN, Illust.

2. In a collective sense, the coat or aggregate of hairs covering the body of an animal or some particular part, esp. that covering the human head or cranium. In exact usage the term hair is restricted to the forms in which the individual hairs are fairly coarse and more or less straight. If they are very fine and thickly placed, as in the beaver, the coat is more exactly termed fur; while if they are fine and kinky, with a rough surface giving them a tendency to felt or mat together, as on sheep, the coat is termed wool. In ANTHROPOLOGY, hair is one of the most constant physical traits, and it has been used as the basis for several classifications of mankind. Three main types are generally distinguished: the short woolly hair of the Negro, set in a curved follicle and flat in section; the wavy hair of the Caucasian, set in a straight follicle, oval in section, and usually longer on females than on males; and the straight lank hair of the Mongolian and American Indian, round in section and long and coarse on both sexes. The European type of hair is sometimes considered as a variety of the straight. Hence Huxley makes but two main types (Levotrichi, the smooth-haired peoples, and Ulotrichi, the woolly-haired); so also Haeckel, whose classification is: (1) Ulotriches (woolly-haired), including the Lophocomi (tuft-haired), as the Hottentots (cf. PEPPERCORN), and the Eriocomi (fleecy-haired), as the Negroes. (2) Lissotriches (lank-haired), including the Euthycomi (straight-haired), as the Mongols, and the Euplocomi (curly-haired), as the Dravidians. See MAN.

3. Bot. An outgrowth of the epidermis, consisting of one or of several cells, and assuming a variety of forms. Hairs may be simple, branched, or stellate, and are often gland-tipped. Collectively they constitute the pubescence.

4. Fabric made of hair; haircloth; a mat or wrap of such fabric, as used in drying hops, extracting oils, etc.

5. Firearms. In the lock mechanism, a secondary spring device acting upon the tumbler catch, which is withdrawn from the tumbler by the hair trigger. See HAIR TRIGGER.

6. Any very small distance, or degree; a hairbreadth.

against the hair, contrary to the direction in which the hair naturally lies; hence, against one's wishes or inclinations; against the grain. —a h. of the (same) dog (that bit), a partial application of the cause of an ill as a remedy for it; —in allusion to the superstition that a hair from a dog that has bitten one will cure the bite; often, specif., a drink of liquor on the morning after much drinking. —h. and hide, h. and hoof. Obs. equivs. of HIDE AND HAIR.

2. Ethnol. A member of the chief native race of North Africa, including not only the Berber peoples north of the Sahara, but also Fulahs, Tuaregs, and Tibus in the Sudan, the extinct Guanches of the Canaries, and in East Africa the ancient Egyptians and their descendants, and the principal Ethiopian tribes, the Gallas, Somalis, and conquering tribes far to the south (see HAMITIC). The Hamites are characterized by tall stature, often with magnificent physique, dark olive, bronze, or even black skin, wavy hair, oval face with well-formed features, the nose often aquiline. Especially among the Berbers, blond traits are not rare. Characteristically, the Hamites are agriculturists, in contrast to the nearly related pastoral Semites. In religion they are mainly Moslems (cf., however, ABYSSINIAN, COPT). Ethnologists universally class the Hamites as Caucasians, and many consider them as representatives of the earliest Caucasian colonists of western Europe. Cf. MEDITERRANEAN RACE.

Ham-it'ic (hăm-ĭt'ĭk), a. Of or pert. to the Hamites, or designating, or belonging to, the Hamitic languages, a family of languages of northern Africa, of which the principal tongue, ancient Egyptian, is rivaled in antiquity of records only by Akkadian and Babylonian. These languages are variously classed as agglutinative or inflectional ; some of them, as the ancient Egyptian, which approached monosyllabism, are extremely crude ; others, as the modern Kabyle, are apparently inflectional. The common parentage of the Hamitic and Semitic languages has the support of some scholars. The pronominal system, the formation of the feminine, certain roots, and poverty of tense and mode are points of resemblance (see AGGLUTINATIVE LANGUAGES, SEMITIC LANGUAGES). The Hamitic languages are grouped as follows : a Ancient Egyptian, written records of which date from probably 5000 B. C. (see HIEROGLYPHIC, HIERATIC, DEMOTIC, for Egyptian writing), together with its descendant, Coptic. These two languages represent the chief Hamitic literary development, but are now extinct, except that Coptic is still the language of the liturgies, etc., of the Coptic Church. b The North African group, including the ancient Libyan dialects such as Numidian, Mauritanian, Gætulian, etc., now represented only by inscriptions, together with the modern Berber languages, Kabyle, Shilha, and Tamashek, probably derived from these. c The Ethiopian or Cushite languages, spoken in Abyssinia and southward, and including Afar, Agao, Beja, Galla, Somali, etc. Some of these possess a slight literary development.

ham'let (hăm'lĕt), n. [ME. hamelet, OF. hamelet, dim. of hamel, F. hameau, LL. hamellum, a dim. of German origin ; cf. G. heim home. See HOME.] A little cluster of houses in the country ; specif. : a A small group of houses belonging to a parish or village.

Besides vills there were hamlets ; but the hamlet seems always to have lain within the boundaries of a vill, and, though the law might for some purpose take note of its existence, still it seems to have been but rarely treated as more than a mere geographical tract. On the other hand, the vill or township was no mere part of the earth's surface, it was a community. Pollock & Matt.

b In the State of Ohio, in the United States, an incorporated village or town the officers of which are three trustees, a clerk, treasurer, marshal, and supervisor, as provided by statute (Rev. Stat., Title XII, Div. 7, ch. 1).

Syn. — Impede, encumber, embarrass, hinder, restrain, restrict, confine, load, burden, bind, curb, chain, tie. — HAMPER, TRAMMEL, CLOG, FETTER, SHACKLE, MANACLE are here compared esp. in their fig uses. To HAMPER is to encumber or embarrass as by an impediment or restraining influence of any sort; to TRAMMEL is more specifically to entangle or confine as if in a net; CLOG emphasizes the idea of something which weighs upon or clings to one; as, "These difficulties and perplexities the man of intrigues is always hampered with" (Sharp); "trammeled in his endeavors by the web of intrigue about him; "how to entangle, trammel up, and snare your soul in mine" (Keats); "the sense of moving heavily in a dim and clogging medium" (G Eliot). FETTER (referring primarily to chains for the feet) suggests relatively complete confinement or restraint, as, "So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!" (R. Browning); cf. "I refused to visit Shelley that I might have my own unfettered scope" (Keats). SHACKLE (referring to chains for the wrist or ankle) and MANACLE (implying shackles for the hand or wrist) are less often used in a fig. sense; as, "tearing asunder the shackles of the free-born spirit" (Hazlitt); "Grief too can manacle the mind" (Lovelace). See TIE, IMPRISON, DIFFICULTY.

hand (hănd), n. [AS. hand, hond; akin to D., G., & Sw. hand, OHG. hant, Dan. haand, Icel. hönd, Goth. handus.] 1. The terminal part of the arm when, as in man and the apes, it is specially modified as a grasping organ. In anatomical usage the hand, or manus, includes the phalanges, or fingers and thumb; the metacarpus, or hand proper, and the carpus, or wrist; but in popular usage the wrist is often excluded. In zoology the term is extended to the corresponding segments of the fore limb of vertebrates above fishes, regardless of the way in which they are modified. The hand of man, being relieved of service in supporting the body, is more perfectly specialized as a prehensile organ than that of other animals. It possesses unusual mobility of the digits (especially of the thumb, which can be perfectly opposed to any of the others), and capability of complete pronation and supination.

3. Felicitous elegance; graceful aptitude; felicity; — used especially of language; as, his happiness in debate.

Syn. — HAPPINESS, FELICITY, BEATITUDE, BLESSEDNESS, BLISS. HAPPINESS, the general term, applies to the enjoyment or pleasurable satisfaction attendant upon welfare of any kind; FELICITY (see FELICITATE), denoting intense happiness, has more formal or elevated connotations; BEATITUDE is supreme felicity; as, "It is one main point of happiness, that he that is happy doth know and judge himself to be so" (Coleridge); "A long, deep sob of that mysterious, wondrous happiness that is one with pain" (G. Eliot), cf. "too gay to be happy" (Hazlitt); "too happy to be glad" (Keats); "What more felicity can fall to creature than to enjoy delight with liberty?" (Spenser); "We may fancy in the happy mother's breast a feeling somewhat akin to that angelic felicity, that joy which angels feel in heaven for a sinner repentant; a gratitude and joy of all others the loftiest, the purest, the keenest" (Thackeray), "About him all the Sanctities of Heaven stood thick as stars, and from his sight received beatitude past utterance" (Milton). Both happiness and felicity are often used of aptness or unstudied grace, esp. of expression (see PERTINENT); as, "The happiness of the epithets . . . the felicity of his rapid sketches and unforeseen audacities" (Mrs. Humphry Ward). BLESSEDNESS suggests deep or refined enjoyment arising from the purest domestic, benevolent, or religious affections; BLISS denotes even more exalted or ecstatic felicity; both blessedness and bliss, like beatitude, often refer to the joys of heaven; as, "Thrice blest whose lives are faithful prayers, whose loves in higher loves endure; what souls possess themselves so pure, or is there blessedness like theirs?" (Tennyson); "Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive, but to be young was very Heaven!" (Wordsworth). See PLEASURE, CHEERFULNESS.

har'ass (hăr'ăs; see note below), v. t.; HAR'ASSED (-ăst), HAR'ASS-ING. [F. harasser; cf. OF. harer to set (a dog) on.] 1. To fatigue; to exhaust; to tire with repeated and exhausting efforts; to weary by importunity; to cause to endure excessive burdens or anxieties; — sometimes followed by out.

Vext with lawyers and harass'd with debt Tennyson.

2. To harry; to lay waste; to raid, as an enemy's country.

3. Mil. To worry and impede by repeated attacks.

4. To scrape; — a dyers' term.

☞ Often pron'd hȧ-rȧs', but this has never been countenanced by orthoepists.

Syn. — Weary, jade, tire, perplex, trouble, distress, chafe, gall, irritate, ruffle, nettle, bother, pester, badger, harry, hector, bully, provoke, agitate, disturb. — HARASS, ANNOY, VEX, WORRY, PLAGUE, TORMENT, MOLEST, TEASE, TANTALIZE. To HARASS is to weary, esp. by whatever is importunate or burdensome; to ANNOY is to irritate, esp. with reference to the susceptibilities; VEX suggests stronger mental disturbance than annoy, and frequently implies a slight degree of anger; to FRET is to chafe into a state of (often querulous) irritation, WORRY connotes undue or wearing solicitude or borrowing of trouble; as, "harassed by competition that grows stronger every day" (Academy); "a rudeness that would naturally have annoyed his fastidious senses" (Hawthorne); "such petty details as now vexed the brooding soul of the old gentlewoman" (id.); "The hardness of stubbed vulgar constitutions renders them insensible of a thousand things that fret and gall those delicate people, who, as if their skin was peeled off, feel to the quick everything that touches them" (Berkeley); "I have my hands full, and feel 'worried,' which is worse" (Jane W. Carlyle). PLAGUE and TORMENT, as compared, are used colloquially in a weakened sense; as, "I am now plagued with my Latin speech for Wednesday. Not a word written yet, and I do not even know what to write about" (M. Arnold), "If there is a man on earth tormented by the cursed desire to get a whole book into a page, a whole page into a phrase, and this phrase into one word, — that man is myself" (Joubert, trans. M. Arnold). To MOLEST is to annoy or disturb, esp. by malicious or hostile interference; as, "safe, where no critics damn, no duns molest" (Pope). To TEASE is to annoy, esp. by nagging importunity or ill-directed raillery, to TANTALIZE is to torment by awakening and then (often wantonly) frustrating expectation; both tease and tantalize are often used to suggest stimulation; as, "to tease for cash" (Cowper); "Arch Hebe brings a full-brimmed goblet, dances lightly, sings and tantalizes long" (Keats); "They stimulate to thought or tease the fancy with suggestion" (Lowell); "the real meaning, which tantalizes and stimulates with the vanishing glimpses we catch of it" (id.). See IRRITATE, VEXATION, DISTRESS.

har'le-quin, v. i. ; -QUINED (kwĭnd ; -kĭnd) ; -QUIN-ING. To play the harlequin ; to make sport by playing tricks har'le-quin, v. t. To remove or conjure away, as by a harlequin's trick. Rare.

And kitten, if the humor hit,
Has harlequined away the fit. M. Green.

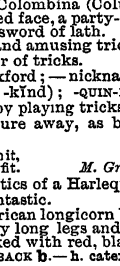
har'le-quin, a. Having the characteristics of a Harlequin, esp. in appearance ; party-colored, fantastic.

harlequin beetle, a very large South American longicorn beetle (Acrocinus longimanus) having very long legs and antennæ. The elytra are curiously marked with red, black, and gray. — h. cabbage bug. See CALICOBACK b. — h. caterpillar, the larva of an American arctiid moth (Cycnia egle) which is covered with black, white, yellow, and orange tufts of hair. It feeds on the milkweed. — h. duck, a sea duck (Histrionicus histrionicus) of northern North America, Iceland, and Siberia, occasionally occurring in northern Europe. The male is slaty blue, handsomely and curiously variegated with black, white, and chestnut, the speculum being violet. — h. flower, any iridaceous plant of the genus Sparaxis. — h. fruit bug, an Australian red and black hemipterous insect (Dindymus versicolor) injurious to apples and other fruit — h. moth, the magpie moth. — h. opal. See OPAL. — h. pigeon, a small bronze-wing pigeon (Histriophaps histrionica) of the plains of the interior and northwest parts of Australia. — h. snake, the bead snake ; sometimes, any of various other coral snakes. — harlequin table, a table having a set of drawers which may be raised from the level top like a Harlequin appearing on the stage from a trap door.



Harlequin Fruit Bug. Enlarged.

har'le-quin-ade' (har'lē-kwĭn-ād'), n. [F. arlequinade.] 1. A play or part of a play in which the Harlequin is conspicuous ; the part of a Harlequin. 2. Buffoonery ; fooling ; waggish trickery. 3. A thing characteristic of a Harlequin or his dress.

har'lot (har'lŭt), n. [ME. harlot, herlot, a vagabond, OF. harlot, herlot, arlot ; cf. Pr. arlot, Sp. arlote, It. arlotto ; of uncertain origin.] 1. a A churl ; rogue ; rascal ; knave ; a person given to low or loose conduct ; — applied to either sex, rarely playfully. Obs. b A male menial ; a servant ; also, a juggler, buffoon, or entertainer. Obs. 2. A prostitute ; a strumpet.

har'lot, a. Wanton ; lewd ; low ; base.

har'lot, v. i. ; HAR'LOT-ED ; HAR'LOT-ING. To play the harlot ; to practice lewdness har'lot-ry (-rĭ), n. 1. Ribaldry ; a ribald story. Obs. 2. Prostitution ; habitual or customary lewdness. 3. A harlot ; baggage ; — chiefly used as a term of reproach.

He sups to-night with a harlotry. Shak.

4. Meretricious attractiveness ; as, harlotry in art. 5. Refuse ; filth ; rubbish. Obs. Oxf. E. D.

Har'lowe, Cla-ris'sa (klȧ-rĭs'ȧ här'lō). The heroine of Richardson's novel "The History of Clarissa Harlowe." She is a young lady who, to escape a distasteful marriage and the persecution of her family, puts herself into the power of Lovelace, an accomplished rake. Unable to seduce her, he drugs and ruins her. She rejects the reparation of marriage, and finally dies of a broken heart.

Har'lung-en (har'lōōng-ĕn), n. pl. [G.] Teut. Myth. Two brothers, Ambrica and Fridila, who possess a treasure containing the jewel Brisingamen (which in another legend is made the necklace of Freya). Enticed from their friend and monitor Eckehart by the deceitful and faithless Sibicho, they are slain by Ermanaric. The tale is often interpreted as a dawn myth. Cf. DIOSCURI.

harm (harm), n. [ME. harm, hearm, AS. hearm ; akin to OS. harm, G. harm grief, Icel. harmr, Dan. harme, Sw. harm ; cf. OSlav. & Russ. sram shame, Skr. çrama toil, fatigue.] 1. Injury ; hurt ; damage ; misfortune.

2. Grief, pain, sorrow. Obs. Chaucer. 3. Evil ; wrong ; wickedness.

A little harm done to a great good end. Shak.

Syn. — Mischief, evil, loss. See INJURY.

harm, v. t. ; HARMED (harmd), HARM'ING [ME. harmen, AS. hearmian. See HARM, n.] To hurt ; injure ; damage.

Though yet he never harmed me. Shak.

har'ma-line (har'mȧ-lĭn ; -lēn , 184), n. Also -lin. [Cf. F. harmaline. See HARMEL.] 1. Chem A crystalline alkaloid, $C_{13}H_{14}ON_2$, in harmel seeds. It forms bitter, yellow salts. 2. Fuchsine. Obs. or R.

har-mat'tan (här-măt'ăn), n. [Ashantee haramata : cf. F. harmattan] A dry, dust-laden wind blowing from the interior on the Atlantic coast of Africa in certain seasons.

har'mel (här'mĕl), n. Also har'ma-la (här'mȧ-lȧ). [Ar. harmal.] A rutaceous herb (Peganum harmala) of southern Europe and the Levant. The strong-scented seeds yield harmaline, and are used as a vermifuge.

harm'ful (harm'fo͝ol), a. Full of harm ; injurious ; hurtful ; mischievous. — harm'ful-ly, adv. — harm'ful-ness, n.

har'mine (här'mĭn ; -mēn ; 184), n. Also -min. [See HARMALINE.] Chem. A white crystalline alkaloid, $C_{13}H_{12}ON_2$, in harmel seeds. By oxidation it yields har-min'ic ac'id (har-mĭn'ĭk), $C_8H_9N_3(CO_2H)_2$.

harm'less (härm'lĕs), a. 1. Free from harm ; unhurt ; free from liability or loss ; as, a bond to save one harmless. 2. Free from power or disposition to harm ; free from guilt ; innocent ; inoffensive.

Syn. — Innocent, innoxious, innocuous, inoffensive, unoffending ; unhurt, unmjured, unharmed.

Har-mo'ni-a (här-mō'nĭ-ȧ), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἁρμονία.] In Greek legend, the wife of Cadmus (which see). At their wedding she was given a costly garment and a necklace, which had the property of stirring up strife and bloodshed, so bringing evil to every possessor. Cf. ALCMEON.

har-mo'ni-al (-ăl), a. 1. Harmonious. 2. Harmonical ; — in the phrase harmonial proportion.

har-mon'ic (-mŏn'ĭk), a. [L. harmonicus, Gr. ἁρμονικός : cf. F. harmonique. See HARMONY.] 1. Of or pert. to music ; musical ; specif., of old music, pert. to melody as apart from rhythm ; melodious. Obs. or R. 2. Concordant ; consonant.

Harmonic twang ! of leather, horn, and brass. Pope.

3. Music. Relating to harmony as distinguished from melody or rhythm. 4. Music & Acous. Of or pertaining to harmonics. 5. Math. Having relations or properties bearing some resemblance to those of musical consonances ; — said of certain numbers, ratios, points, lines, motions, etc. 6. Anthropom. Having the general proportions of the skull and facial form in harmony with each other, that is, having an elongated face with an elongated, or dolichocephalic, skull, a broad face with a broad, or brachycephalic, skull, etc. ; — opposed to disharmonic.

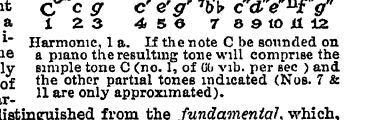
harmonic analysis, the resolution of the actual solution of a problem into the sum of a number of solutions of particular cases of the problem, and the composition of the former out of the latter. Mathematically, it is the solving of a homogeneous linear differential equation under initial or boundary conditions such as make it determinate. — h. analyzer. a Physics. A machine for the automatic resolution of periodic curves into the component sine curves of which they are the resultants. b Math. An integrator for determining the integrals that appear as coefficients in Fourier's series. — h. axis, Math., a ray that meets a curve in the harmonic center of all the intersections of a plane pencil with the curve. — h. close. Music. = CADENCE. — h. complex, Math., in the line geometry, a quadratic complex generated (in an infinity of ways) by lines meeting two conicoids harmonically. — h. conics, Math., two conics for which the sum of the products of the corresponding coefficients (in the equations) is 0. — h. conjugates. See HARMONIC DIVISION. — h. current, Elec., an alternating current the variations of which follow the law of a harmonic, or sine, curve. — h. curve, Math., the curve whose equation is $y = a \sin x$, the ordinates being fixed multiples of the sines of the abscissas. For $a = 1$, this becomes the sinusoid. — h. division, Math., the division of a line segment at two points, internally and externally, in the same ratio. — h. function, Math., any real function u that satisfies Laplace's equation $\frac{\partial^2 u}{\partial x^2} + \frac{\partial^2 u}{\partial y^2} + \frac{\partial^2 u}{\partial z^2} = 0$, and along with its first two sets of derivatives is continuous and one-valued throughout a certain region ; more esp., such a solution of Laplace's equation in only two variables, x and y. A complex harmonic function is the algebraic sum of any number of simple harmonic functions, the arguments forming in general an arithmetic progression · — with a constant term added, the proper mathematical expression for any arbitrary function. See FOURIER'S SERIES. The term may be applied to similar functions of several independent variables. — h. hand. Music. = GUIDONIAN HAND. — h. interval. Music. See INTERVAL, 6. — h. law of Kepler, Astron., Kepler's third law. See KEPLER'S LAWS. — h. mean, Math., the reciprocal of the arithmetic mean of the reciprocals of two quantities. — h. minor mode or scale. Music. See SCALE, 3 a (2) b. — h. motion. See SIMPLE HARMONIC MOTION. — h. multiple telegraph, a system of telegraphy in which many messages are simultaneously transmitted over the same wire. Its operation depends on the synchronous vibration of pairs of reeds at the sending and receiving stations. — h. pencil, Math., four coplanar copunctal rays that cut every transversal in a harmonic row. — h. progression, Math., a progression the reciprocals of whose terms are in arithmetic progression ; — so called because the terms vary as the lengths of strings vibrating to the harmonics of a fundamental tone. — h. range or row, Math., four collinear points forming two pairs of harmonic conjugates. — h. section = HARMONIC DIVISION. — h. sequence of vowels. Philol. = VOWEL HARMONY. — h. series, Math., the series $1 + \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{3} + \frac{1}{4} + \ldots$. — h. suture, Anat., an articulation by simple apposition of comparatively smooth surfaces or edges. — h. triad. a pl. Math. Two triads of collinear points P, Q, R and p, q, r such that $Pp.Qq.Rr + Pq.Qr.Rp + Pr.Qp.Rq + Pr.Qq.Rp + Pq.Qp.Rr + Pp.Qr.Rq = 0$. b Music. The common chord or triad, esp. the major triad.

har-mon'ic (här-mŏn'ĭk), n. 1. Music & Acoustics. a A partial tone, sounded by a simple vibration which is one of the component vibrations of a complex musical tone. The term is usually applied to any of the upper partial tones as distinguished from the fundamental, which, however, is in more scientific usage called the first harmonic. See TONE, 2. b A complex overtone having an upper partial for its fundamental, such as are independently produced by touching a vibrating string at certain points. 2. pl. Elec. In an alternating current, component currents whose frequency is some multiple of the fundamental frequency.



Harmonic, 1 a. If the note C be sounded on a piano the resulting tone will comprise the simple tone C (no. 1, of 66 vib. per sec) and the other partial tones indicated (Nos. 7 & 11 are only approximated).

har-mon'i-ca (-ĭ-kȧ), n. [Fem. fr. L. harmonicus harmonic. See HARMONIC, a.] Music. a An instrument invented by Benjamin Franklin, consisting of a series of hemispherical glasses turning on an axis and played by touching the edges with the dampened finger. b An instrument of graduated strips of glass or metal hung on two tapes, or mounted on a resonance box, and struck with hammers. c A harmonicon (b). d An organ stop of delicate tone.

har-mon'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. 1. Harmonic (in any sense). 2. Gr. Music. = ENHARMONIC, 1. Obs.

har-mon'i-cal, n. Acoustics A kind of harmonium specially tuned to give a pure scale, with 24 overtones of the tone of 66, and 16 of the tone of 132, vibrations per second. It has an appliance called a harmonical bar, by which the first 16 harmonics of C can be sounded at once, except the 7th and 14th, which can be added.

har-mon'i-cal-ly, adv. 1. Harmoniously. 2. Music. In respect to harmony, as distinguished from melody ; as, a passage harmonically correct. 3. Math. In harmonic progression or division.

har'le-quin-esque' (-ĕsk'), har'le-quin'ic (kwĭn'ĭk ; -kĭn'ĭk), a. Characteristic of a harlequin. har'le-quin-ism (-ĭz'm), n. See -ISM.

har'le-quin-ize, v. t. To arrange or manage fantastically.

Har'ley (här'lĭ), n. "The Man of Feeling" in Mackenzie's novel of that name.

har'lock (har'lŏk), n. Prob. corrupt. of charlock or of hardock.

har'lot-ize, v. t. To call, make, or treat as, a harlot.

har'ma-la (har'mȧ-lȧ). Var. of harmala, n.

har'ma-lol (har'mȧ-lŏl ; -lōl), n. [harmala + -ol.] Chem. A red crystalline compound, $C_{12}H_{12}ON_2$, found with harmaline and also formed from it artificially.

har'man, n. Obs. Thieves' Cant. a pl. The stocks. b A constable ; — called also harman beck or beak.

har'mo-ge, n. [L., a proper mingling of colors or sounds, Gr. ἁρμογή junction, harmony.] Harmony in color or sound Obs.

har-mon'i-chord (här-mŏn'ĭ-kôrd), n. Music. A stringed instrument in which a violinlike tone is produced by the action on the strings of wooden wheels charged with resin and operated by a keyboard.

har-mon'i-cs (-ĭks), n. pl. See HARMONIST, 2 c.

har'mo-ni'cian (här'mō-nĭsh'ăn), n. A student or master of harmony and music. Obs. Oxf. E. D.

har-mon'i-con (här-mŏn'ĭ-kŏn), n.; L. pl. -ICA (-kȧ). [Gr. ἁρμονικόν, neut. of ἁρμονικός. See HARMONIC.] Music. a = HARMONICA a & b. b A small wind instrument, played by the mouth, in which the notes are produced by free metallic reeds, one set being sounded by exhaling, another by inhaling. c An orchestrion.

har-mon'ics (-ĭks), n. The doctrine or science of musical sounds.

har-mo'ni-ous (här-mō'nĭ-ŭs), a. [Cf. F. harmonieux. See HARMONY.] 1. Having parts adapted and proportioned to each other; being in harmony in all its parts or with something else; symmetrical; congruous, in accord.

God hath made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us. Locke.

2. Marked by harmony, or agreement in action or feeling; living in peace and friendship; free from discord; as, a harmonious family; a harmonious discussion.

3. Vocally or musically concordant; agreeably consonant; pleasant-sounding; marked by harmony.

har-mon'i-phon (här-mŏn'ĭ-fŏn) } n. [Gr. ἁρμονία har-har-mon'i-phone (här-mŏn'ĭ-fōn) } mony + φωνή sound.] Music. An obsolete wind instrument with a keyboard, in which the sound, which resembled the oboe, was produced by the vibration of thin metallic plates, inclosed within a tube, which was blown through like a clarinet.

har'mo-nist (här'mō-nĭst), n. [Cf. F. harmoniste.] 1. One who shows the agreement or harmony of corresponding passages of different authors, as of the four Evangelists.

2. Music. a A musical composer or performer. b One having special knowledge of, or skill in applying, the principles of harmony. c pl. A school of Greek theorists headed by Aristoxenus (b. about B. C. 354), a pupil of Aristotle, who based the principles of music on the subjective effects of tones, and not on their mathematical relations, as was done by the Pythagoreans.

3. A poet. Rare.

4. One who brings anything, or various things, into harmony or a harmonious whole; a harmonizer.

5. [cap.] = HARMONITE.

har'mo-nis'tic (-nĭs'tĭk), a. Of or pert. to, or characteristic of, a harmony or harmonist, as, harmonistic methods.

har'mo-nis'tic, n. Harmonistic learning or study, esp. that relating to harmony of the Scriptures. See HARMONY, 4.

Har'mo-nite (här'mō-nit), n. Eccl. Hist. One of a communistic religious sect, founded in Württemberg in the 18th century, composed of followers of George Rapp, a weaver. In 1803 a portion of this sect settled in Pennsylvania. In 1825 it founded the settlement of Economy, and its members have since sometimes been known as Economites.

har-mo'ni-um (här-mō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.: cf. F. harmonium. See HARMONY.] Music. An instrument, resembling a small organ and esp. designed for church music, in which the tones are produced by forcing air by means of a bellows through free metallic reeds. It is now made with one or two keyboards, and has pedals and stops. Sometimes, any of several other kinds of reed organ (which see).

har'mo-nize (här'mō-nīz), v. i.; HAR'MO-NIZED (-nīzd); HAR'MO-NIZ'ING (-nīz'ĭng). [Cf. F. harmoniser.] 1. To play or sing in harmony Obs. & R.

2. To agree in action, adaptation, or effect on the mind; to agree in sense or purport; to agree in sentiment, emotion, or the like; as, the parts of a mechanism harmonize; these colors harmonize; our passions harmonize.

3. To be in peace and friendship, as individuals, families.

4. Music. To unite in an effect of consonance; to form a concord; as, the tones harmonize perfectly.

Syn. — See CORRESPOND.

har'mo-nize, v. t. 1. To make harmonious; to bring into accord; to adjust in fit proportions; to cause to agree; to show the agreement of, to reconcile the apparent contradiction of; as, mutual understanding will do much to harmonize men and their differences.

A music harmonizing our wild cries. Tennyson.

2. Music. To accompany with harmony; to provide with parts, as an air, or melody.

har-mon'o-graph (här-mŏn'ō-grȧf), n. [Gr. ἁρμονία harmony + -graph.] An instrument, usually a combination of two pendulums, for combining and autographically recording two or more vibrations, esp. two simple harmonic motions at right angles, in a single curve; an instrument for drawing Lissajous figures. Cf. SYMPALMOGRAPH.

har-mon'o-gram (-grăm), n. [Gr. ἁρμονία harmony + -gram.] A curve obtained by such an instrument as the harmonograph or the sympalmograph.

har'mo-nom'e-ter (här'mō-nŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [Gr. ἁρμονία harmony + -meter: cf. F. harmonomètre.] An instrument for measuring the harmonic relations of sounds. It is often a monochord furnished with movable bridges.

har'mo-ny (har'mō-nĭ), n.; pl. -NIES (-nĭz). [ME. armonye, OF. armonie (cf. It. armonia), F. harmonie, L. harmonia, Gr. ἁρμονία joint, proportion, concord, fr. ἁρμός a fitting or joining.] 1. The just adaptation of parts to each other in any system or combination of things, or in things intended to form a connected whole; such an agreement between the different parts of a design or composition as to produce unity of effect or an æsthetically pleasing whole; as, the harmony of the universe.

How parts relate to parts, or they to whole,
The body's harmony. Pope.

2. Concord or agreement in facts, opinions, manners, interests, etc.; good correspondence; peace and friendship; as, friends who live and act in harmony.

3. Music. a Generally: Musical consonance; tuneful sound; music regarded as an agreeable blending of tones, a concord. "Angelic harmonies." Milton. b The combination of simultaneous tones into a chord, a triad, as, the dominant harmony, the triad based on the dominant. c The structure of a piece of music according to the composition, progression, and modulation of its chords; — distinguished from its melody and its rhythm. It is two-part, three-part, etc., according to the number of its voice parts. It is close when its three upper voice parts lie within the compass of an octave; it is open, dispersed, or extended when one (or more than one) voice part is so placed that, by transposing it an octave, it would fall between two others. d The science of the structure, relation, and progression of chords. As distinguished from counterpoint, which is historically earlier, harmony regards the voice parts vertically rather than horizontally, and treats of intervals, chords, voice progression, suspensions, etc., tonality, cadences, modulation, and thorough bass. Its development followed the establishment of the major and minor modes in place of the ecclesiastical, and the introduction of equal temperament.

4. A literary work which brings together or arranges systematically parallel passages of historians respecting the same events, and shows their agreement or consistency, as, a harmony of the Gospels.

5. Anat. A harmonic suture.

Syn. — HARMONY, MELODY. HARMONY suggests the pleasing concord of simultaneous sounds or strains differing in pitch or quality, MELODY, the agreeable arrangement of successive musical sounds in a single strain.

harmony of the spheres, the doctrine promulgated by the Pythagoreans that the celestial spheres are separated by intervals corresponding to the relative lengths of strings which produce harmonious tones. — h. of vowels. = VOWEL HARMONY.

with a yellow patch on the buttocks and black markings on the face. The horns are ringed and divergent, and bent back at the tips. In a broader sense the name is applied also to the other species of the same genus, which are all confined to Africa excepting B. bubalis (see BUBALIS). Among these are the sassaby, or bastard hartebeest (B. lunata), formerly abundant on the plains of Cape Colony and farther north, the bontebok, and the blesbok.

Har'ter Act (har'tẽr). [After Michael D. Harter (1846–96), American Congressman.] U. S. A federal statute (Act of Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105) forbidding the insertion in contracts of affreightment of any clause exempting the shipowner from liability for the negligence of his servants.

Hart'ford Con-ven'tion (härt'fẽrd). U. S. Hist. A convention of delegates from the New England States held at Hartford, Connecticut, from Dec. 15, 1814, to Jan. 5, 1815, with the avowed object of devising means of security and defense against foreign nations and of protecting State privileges against alleged national encroachments. As its meetings were secret, it was suspected at the time that secession was contemplated, but no treasonable intention could be proved. It issued a protest against the war with England, which was practically over before the convention adjourned, and against the refusal of the National Government to pay for defending Massachusetts and Connecticut because those States had declined to put their militias under federal control.

Hartford fern. [So called because it was formerly very abundant near Hartford, Conn.] The climbing fern.

Har-to'gi-a (här-tō'jĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., after J. Hartog, an early Dutch traveler.] Bot. a A large genus of South African rutaceous plants, often called Agathosma. harvest fish. A small marine fish (Peprilus paru), of the family Stromateidæ, having a narrow deep body, found along the Atlantic coast of America from Brazil to Cape Cod. In Virginia it is called whiting. The name is applied to allied fishes, as the dollar fish (Poronotus triacanthus).

harvest fly. Any of certain cicadas, as the dog-day cicada whose note is heard chiefly about harvest time; often, any member of the family Cicadidæ.

harvest home. The gathering and bringing home of the harvest; the time of harvest; also, a feast made at the close of the harvest; hence, the song sung by the reapers. The celebration of the harvest home is very ancient in Europe, and is regarded by folklore students as the survival of rites originally religious or magical. Characteristic is the preparation of a rude image, either a doll decorated with grain and flowers or an image made from the last sheaf, which is brought in with the last load from the field amid the singing and shouting of the harvesters. This image is variously called the harvest queen, harvest doll, kirn baby, kirn doll, kirn maiden, etc., and is regarded as an emblem of the "corn spirit" (which see). Often one of the harvesters is decked out with grain and ribbons, personating the same idea. Dancing, feasting, and free merry-making are features of the feast, which is called by various other names, as hockey, kirn, mell.

har'vest-man (har'vĕst-măn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). 1. A man engaged in harvesting, esp. a hired helper.

2. Any arachnid of the order Phalangida, whose members superficially resemble the true spiders, but have a small rounded body composed of an indistinctly segmented cephalothorax to which the short broad abdomen, consisting of six segments, is broadly joined. Most of the forms have very long slender legs, and are popularly called daddy long-legs. The harvestmen have chelate chelicerae and leglike, though rather short, pedipalpi, and breathe by tracheæ. They feed on small insects, esp. aphids, and are perfectly harmless. They do not spin webs.

harvest moon. The moon near the full at harvest time, or just after the autumnal equinox, when, by reason of the small angle between the moon's orbit and the horizon, it rises only a few minutes later each day.

harvest mouse. a A very small European field mouse (Mus minutus). It builds a globular nest on the stems of wheat or other plants. b A small field mouse (Reithrodontomys lecontii), several varieties of which are found in the southern United States.

harvest tick. The six-legged larval forms of certain ticks, which are found in grass and bushes, and attach themselves to men and animals, burrowing under the skin, and causing intense itching. The adult forms of many species are unknown, and they are often placed in a provisional genus, Leptus. The common form of England is Tetranychus autumnalis. An American species very troublesome in the southern United States, and known as Leptus irritans, is probably the young of a species of the genus Trombidium.

Harvest Tick

haste (hāst), n. [ME. hast, haste, fr. OF. haste, F. hâte, of G. origin; cf OHG. heisti violent, impetuous, AS. hæste violent, hæst violence, fury, Goth. hafsts strife.] 1. Celerity of motion; speed; swiftness; dispatch; — applied to voluntary action.

The king's business required haste. 1 Sam xxi. 8.

2. Undue celerity; precipitance arising from sudden excitement of feeling; unthinking or rash hurry.

Haste makes waste. Old Proverb.

I said in my haste, All men are liars. Ps. cxvi. 11.

3. The state of being urged or pressed to act quickly; desire to accomplish something without delay; urgency; hurry; as, I am in great haste.

Syn. — Quickness, nimbleness; impetuosity, precipitancy, precipitation; flurry, bustle; promptitude, alacrity, alertness; celerity, velocity, swiftness, rapidity. — HASTE, HURRY, SPEED, EXPEDITION, DISPATCH. HASTE denotes quickness, often urgency, sometimes precipitancy, of (esp. voluntary) action; HURRY connotes confusion and want of collected thought; SPEED denotes swiftness of (esp forward) movement; it is not (like haste and hurry) confined to voluntary agents, and it sometimes retains its original implication of prosperity or success; as, "She came in straightway with haste unto the king" (Mark vi 25); "His tongue, all impatient to speak, . . . did stumble with haste" (Shak.); "Marry in haste and repent at leisure" (Proverb); "absolutely out of breath from haste, when there was not the least occasion for hurry in the world" (Jane Austen); "Yes, there is hurry; or, rather, as I hate hurry in all things, I would say that there is ground for dispatch" (Trollope); "The more hurry, the worse speed" (Proverb); "The birdlike speed with which his mind was surveying the ground where it had been creeping for years" (G. Eliot); "Oxus, forgetting the bright speed he had in his high mountain cradle in Pamere" (M. Arnold). EXPEDITION (see PROMPT) and DISPATCH suggest promptitude, esp. in the setting forward or conclusion of a business or affair; as, "To do everything when it ought to be done is the soul of expedition" (Scott); "The soul of dispatch is decision" (Hazlitt). See FAST, VELOCITY.

haste, v. t. & i.; HAST'ED (hās'tĕd ; -tĭd ; 151); HAST'ING (hās'tĭng). [ME. hasten, fr. OF. haster, F. hâter. See HASTE, n.] To hasten; hurry. Now Chiefly Literary.

[ME. haten, hatien, AS. hatian; akin to OS. hatan, hatōn to be hostile to, D. haten to hate, OHG. hazzēn, hazzōn, G. hassen, Icel. & Sw. hata, Dan. hade, Goth. hatan, hatjan. Cf. HATE, n., HEINOUS.] 1. To feel hate or hatred for, to have a great aversion to, usually, in case of persons, accompanied by ill will; to dislike intensely, to detest, abhor, as, to hate one's enemies; to hate hypocrisy.
Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer 1 John III. 15.
2. To feel great aversion for, dislike exceedingly, — with an infinitive, or a clause with that; as, to hate to get wet.
I hate that he should linger here. Tennyson Syn. — HATE, ABHOR, DETEST, ABOMINATE, LOATHE. HATE, the general term, implies extreme aversion, esp. as coupled with enmity or malice; DETEST connotes violent or intense antipathy or dislike, as, "She did not hate him; she rather despised him, and just suffered him" (Thackeray); "Whom we fear more than love, we are not far from hating" (Richardson); "The mob is a monster I never could abide.... I detest the whole of it, as a mass of ignorance, presumption, malice, and brutality" (Smollett); "I mortally detest cards" (Fielding). ABHOR suggests profound (as it were, shuddering) repugnance; ABOMINATE, strong detestation, as of something ill-omened or shameful; LOATHE implies utter disgust; as, "Yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall abhor me" (Job ix. 31), "I detest, abhor, execrate, and (with Friar John) give them to six score thousand devils!" (Lamb); "That they may abominate [envy] as a great crime" (Law); "Nor hate another's crime, nor loathe thine own" (Shelley), "I loathe the task of copying" (Byron). See RESENTMENT, ANTIPATHY, HATEFUL, ODIUM. hate, v. i. To feel hate or hatred.
hate, n. [ME. hate (prob. influenced by the verb), hete, AS. hete; akin to D. haat, G. hass, Icel. hatr, Sw. hat, Dan. had, Goth. hatis. Cf. HATE, v.] 1. An emotion of intense aversion, usually springing from anger, fear, or a sense of injury, also, an emotional habit, or attitude of mind, in which aversion is coupled with settled ill will. Cf. HATRED.
For in a wink the false love turns to hate. Tennyson.
2. An object of hatred.
The scum of men, the hate and scourge of God Marlowe hate'ful (hāt'fo͝ol), a. 1. Full of hate, manifesting hate or hatred; malignant; malevolent. Archaic.
And worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
His rival's conquest Dryden
2. Exciting or deserving great dislike, aversion, or disgust, odious. "Wretched, hateful day!" Shak.
Syn. — Repulsive, repellent, repugnant, abhorrent, disgusting, revolting, loathsome, disagreeable, unpleasant, unpalatable, forbidding. — HATEFUL, ODIOUS, OBNOXIOUS, OFFENSIVE, INVIDIOUS. Hateful and odious are sometimes used with little distinction. But HATEFUL more frequently applies to that which excites actual hatred, ODIOUS, to that which is excessively disagreeable, or which awakens repugnance; as, "Why should n't we hate what is hateful in people, and scorn what is mean?" (Thackeray); "Between these two natures, so antipathetic, so hateful to each other, there was depending an unpardonable affront" (Stevenson), "Hateful is the dark-blue sky" (Tennyson); "Our blind poet, who in his later day stood almost single, uttering odious truth" (Wordsworth); "There was something more odious to him in her friendship than her hatred" (Thackeray); "Even my wife could not help saying that Mr. Sam was an odious little creature" (id.). That is OBNOXIOUS, as here compared (see RESPONSIBLE), which is highly objectionable, that is OFFENSIVE which is actively annoying, insulting, or repulsive; as, "He would renounce me for a sister, if I encouraged the addresses of a man so obnoxious to them all" (Richardson), "No Italian can hate an Austrian more than I do: unless it be the English, the Austrians seem to me the most obnoxious race under the sky" (Byron). "In himself he was wearisome, but as the friend of Tom and the admirer of Julia he became offensive" (Jane Austen); "There are two modes in which a young man may be free and easy with his elders or superiors, — the mode pleasant and the mode offensive" (Trollope). That is INVIDIOUS (cf. ENVIOUS) which procures or entails odium, ill will, or envy; as, "What I would urge, therefore, is that no invidious distinction should be made between the Old Learning and the New" (Lowell), "the invidious word usury" (Hume). See HATE, ODIUM.

12. To deceive, swindle; trick. Slang.

13. To cause or procure to be, go, or do; to effect · exact; require; desire.

I had the church accurately described to me. Scott.
Have out all men from me. 2 Sam. xiii 9.
I will not have thee die. Tennyson.

14. To take or hold (one's self); to proceed promptly; — used reflexively, often with ellipsis of the pronoun; as, to have after one; to have at one or at a thing, i. e., to aim at one or at a thing; to attack.

Have through the very middest of you. Shak.

15. To suffer or experience from an exterior source; as, he had his leg broken.

☞ Have, as an auxiliary verb, is used with the past participle of any verb to form its "perfect tenses;" as, I have loved; I shall have eaten. Originally it was used only with the participle of transitive verbs, and denoted the possession of the object in the state indicated by the participle; as, I have conquered him, I have or hold him in a conquered state; but it has long since lost this independent significance, and is used with the participles both of transitive and intransitive verbs as a device for expressing completed action. See under BE, 1. Had is used, especially in poetry, for would have or should have, and for would or would have with adjectives, adverbs, or phrases of comparison, as, as well, as good, as lief, rather, better, liefer, best, liefest, and the like, to indicate preference or advisability. "We had better leave her." C. Brontë. The original construction was that of the dative with forms of be, followed by the infinitive.

And lever me is be pore and trewe. C. Mundi (Trans.).
[And more agreeable to me it is to be poor and true.]
For him was lever have at his bed's head Twenty bookes, clad in black or red, . . .
Than robes rich, or fithel, or gay sawtrie Chaucer.

Gradually the nominative with had has replaced this construction. During the transition the nominative with was or were, and with the present forms have, hast, hath, and the dative with had are found.

Poor lady, she were better love a dream. Shak.
You were best hang yourself. Beau. & Fl.
Me rather had my heart might feel your love
Than my unpleased eye see your courtesy Shak.
Yet have I liefer lose my life Than of my body have a stain. Chaucer.
I hadde lever thin wyf be schent,
That ye hadde rad his legende, as have I. Chaucer
I had as lief not be as live to be In awe of such a thing as I myself. Shak.
I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness Ps lxxxiv 10

Syn. — HAVE, HOLD, OWN, POSSESS. HAVE is the general term; HOLD is stronger, and often implies retention or occupancy; to OWN is to have or hold as property; POSSESS implies esp. ownership with full right, title, or control; as, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee" (Acts iii. 6); "Once did she hold the gorgeous East in fee" (Wordsworth); "Owning but a little more than beasts, [thou] abidest lame and poor" (Tennyson); "What men gain fairly — that they should possess" (Shelley); "In your patience possess ye your souls" (Luke xxi. 19).

of all hawks are those of the genera Accipiter, which includes the sparrow hawk of Europe and the sharp-shinned and Cooper's hawks of America, and Astur, which consists of the goshawks. These are small or moderately large short-winged hawks, with comparatively long tail and legs, and hunt their prey in the manner termed raking, pursuing it swiftly and following its most abrupt turns and dodges. Hawks were formerly extensively trained for use in hunting (see FALCONRY). Though some occasionally destroy poultry, they feed largely on field mice, reptiles, insects, etc., and are often more useful than harmful. See also NIGHTHAWK.

haze (hāz), n. [Of uncertain origin; cf. E. dial. haze to drizzle, to be foggy, also AS. hasu, heasu, gray.] Light vapor or smoke in the air which more or less impedes vision, with little or no dampness; a lack of transparency in the air; hence, fig., obscurity; dimness.
O'er the sky
The silvery haze of summer drawn. Tennyson.
The haze that overhangs the science of ethics. J. E. Maude.
Syn. — HAZE, MIST, FOG. HAZE suggests a (frequently pleasing) lack of transparency in the air, often due to heat, MIST always suggests moisture; FOG is thick or dense mist; as, "Soft on the south wind sleeps the haze" (Emerson); "But the majestic river floated on, out of the mist and hum of that low land, into the frosty starlight" (M. Arnold); "Whiles all the night, through fog smoke white, glimmered the white moonshine" (Coleridge); cf. "Yon hazy ridges . . . climbing suffused with sunny air" (Wordsworth); "Jocund day stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops" (Shak.). Fig. haze and mist suggest vagueness or indefiniteness, or (esp. in the case of mist) that which renders vague or indistinct; fog connotes great mental confusion or obscurity, as, "the indefiniteness which hung in her mind like a thick summer haze" (G. Eliot); "Is it that the haze of grief makes former gladness loom so great?" (Tennyson); "The mist around that great crime . . . has never been penetrated" (W. Pater); "Through the distant mist of years they gleam" (Shelley); "But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray, his rising fogs prevail upon the day" (Dryden).

hear'ing, n. 1. Act or power of perceiving sound; auditory sensation, or the capacity for it; audition. Hearing is a special sense with a characteristic end organ (see EAR) responsive to a characteristic stimulus (see SOUND). Its primary discriminations are of noises and tones, the former being occasioned by the nonperiodic impact of air particles, the latter by periodic vibrations. The range of hearing includes about 11,000 tones (correlative with stimuli ranging from about 16 to perhaps nearly 50,000 vibrations per second) and, in respect of loudness, possibly 600 noises. In defective hearing there may be deafness to the lower, higher, or middle, or to scattered ranges of the tone series, while the remainder is discriminated. Music employs less than 100 pitch tones, gaining variety by fusion of these. See DEAFNESS, MUSIC, NOISE, TONE; cf. AMUSIA, COLOR AUDITION, IMAGINATION hearsay evidence. Law. Primarily, testimony which consists in a narration by one person of matters told him by another; in a wider sense, such evidence as does not derive its value solely from the credit given to the witness himself as such, but rests in part on the veracity and competency of some other person, or, as sometimes used, of the witness at another time. It is, with a few exceptions, inadmissible as testimony. The four main exceptions to the rule excluding hearsay evidence (called the hearsay-evidence, or hearsay, rule) relate to: evidence in matters of public and general interest; ancient possession, declarations against interest; and dying declarations. There are some others of a miscellaneous nature.

2. Attention to what is delivered; opportunity to be heard; audience; as, I could not obtain a hearing.

2. Law Hearsay evidence or testimony. Colloq.

1. Anat. & Zoöl. A hollow muscular organ, which, by contracting rhythmically, keeps up the circulation of the blood. The adult human heart is about five inches long and three and one half inches broad, of conical form, placed obliquely in the chest, with the base, or broad end, upward and to the right, and the apex opposite the interval between the cartilages of the fifth and sixth ribs on the left side. It is enveloped in a serous sac, the pericardium, and consists, as in other mammals and in birds, of four chambers. The two upper are called auricles; the two lower, ventricles. The latter have thick muscular walls. The action of the heart is that of a force pump. The two auricles contract and force the blood (which they receive from the veins) into the ventricles. Then these contract and force it into the arteries. Valves (see TRICUSPID VALVE and MITRAL VALVE) prevent the return of the blood into the auricles when the ventricles contract, and other valves (see SEMILUNAR VALVES) prevent its return from the arteries when the ventricles relax again. (See CIRCULATION, PULSE.) In most reptiles and amphibians the septum separating the ventricles is more or less incomplete. In fishes there is usually but one auricle and one ventricle. The higher invertebrates generally have a heart even if the system of blood vessels is very imperfect. In most mollusks it consists of a ventricle and one or two auricles; in the majority of arthropods it is tubular, receiving the blood from a surrounding pericardial sinus through lateral openings provided with valves. The complex heart of the vertebrates is developed from a simple tubular organ in the embryo.
2. The heart regarded as the seat of life or strength; hence, Obs., life.
Bread which strengtheneth man's heart. Ps. CIV. 15.
3. The heart regarded as the seat of spiritual or conscious life; consciousness; mind; soul; spirit; — now always metaphorical. Hence, a faculty or a phase of consciousness, or its seat; specif.: a The emotional as distinguished from the intellectual nature; as, heart and head often disagree; a man of heart; hence, emotion of a particular kind, esp. a benevolent emotion, as love, sympathy, cordiality; as, to lose one's heart, to fall in love; to win one's heart, to gain one's good will or affection. b Courage; spirit; ardor; enthusiasm; as, to be of good heart.
Eve, recovering heart, replied Milton.
c The understanding; intellect; specif., in to learn by heart, memory. "Songs, for fools to get by heart." Pope. d Intent; purpose; desire; wish. Obs., exc. in after one's own heart, that is, just as one desires.
A man after his own heart. 1 Sam XIII 14.
e Conscience; moral sensibility; as, his own heart reproves his conduct. f Temperament; disposition; mood; as, a light, a merry, or a heavy heart.
Not changing heart with habit. Shak.
4. A term of affectionate address. "I speak to thee, my heart." Shak.
5. A man; person; — usually with an epithet of commendation; as, they were stout hearts and true; — sometimes used in address. "Heigh, my hearts!" Shak.
6. The bosom; breast; also, Obs. or Dial., the stomach.
7. The part nearest the middle or center; the part most hidden and within; the inmost or most essential part of any body or system, esp. when considered as the source of life and motion; the center of activity.
Exploits done in the heart of France. Shak.
Peace subsisting at the heart Of endless agitation. Wordsworth.
8. Specif.: a The solid central part or core of a tree; also, the pith of wood, the core of an apple, or the like. b The core of a twisted column.
9. Vital part; secret meaning; real intention.
And then show you the heart of my message. Shak.
10. Vigorous and efficient activity; power of fertile production; condition of the soil, whether good or bad.
That the spent earth may gather heart again. Dryden.
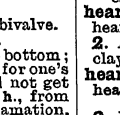
11. Something resembling a heart in shape; specif.: a A conventionalized representation of a heart, as a decorative figure (see Illust.) or a trinket or other object. b Mach. A heart-shaped cam. c Hort. A heart cherry. d Naut. A heart-shaped block through which a lanyard is reeved to extend stays. e Founding. A molder's heart-shaped trowel or tool.



Heart, 11 a.

12. Cards. a One of a suit of playing cards distinguished by the conventionalized figure of the heart in red. b pl. This suit. c pl. Card Playing. A game, somewhat like whist, in which the object is to avoid taking tricks containing hearts. It is played with the full pack.
13. The adductor muscle of an oyster or similar bivalve.
14. Short for God's heart, used as an oath. Obs.
at heart, in the inmost character or disposition; at bottom; really; as, he is at heart a good man. — for one's h., for one's life; if one's life were at stake. Obs. "I could not get him for my heart to do it." Shak. — from one's h., from one's inmost soul; sincerely. — h. alive! an exclamation, chiefly of surprise or vexation. — h. and hand, with enthusiastic coöperation; willingly. — h. and soul, one's whole being; with the utmost earnestness. — H. of England, Warwickshire; — from its central position. — h. of heart, or h. or hearts, inmost heart; core of the heart. — H. of Mary, the Immaculate Heart. — Heart of Mid-lo'thi-an (mĭd-lō'thĭ-ăn), the tollbooth, or old jail, of Edinburgh; — popularly so called, Midlothian being another name for Edinburgh County. heart (härt), v. t.; HEART'ED, HEART'ING. [Cf. AS. hiertan, hyrtan. See HEART, n.] 1. To give heart to, to hearten; encourage; inspirit. Obs. or R.
2. To fix or seat in the heart; to take to heart.
My cause is hearted, thine hath no less reason. Shak.
3. Masonry. To fill in with rubble or the like, as a wall.

heart, v. i. To form a compact center, or heart.

heart'ache' (härt'āk'), n. [Cf. AS. heortece.] Lit., pain in the heart; hence, sorrow; anguish of mind, mental pang heart'beat' (-bēt'), n. A pulsation of the heart; hence, a throb of feeling; an emotion.

heart blood. Blood from the heart; life blood; hence, life; anything very precious or vital.

heart bond. Masonry. A bond in which no header stone stretches across the wall, but two headers meet in the middle, and their joint is covered by another stone laid header fashion.

heart'break'ing (hart'brāk'ĭng, 87), a. Causing overpowering sorrow.

heart'bro'ken (-brō'k'n; 87), a. Overcome by sorrow. — heart'bro'ken-ly, adv. — heart'bro'ken-ness, n.

heart'burn' (hart'bûrn'), n. 1. Med. Burning sensation in the stomach, often with inclination to vomit; cardialgia.
2. Discontent or enmity; envy; jealousy.

2 To affect or treat with enmity or jealousy. Obs.

heart'burn'ing, n. 1 Med. = HEARTBURN.
2. Discontent; secret enmity. Swift.
The transaction did not fail to leave heartburnings. Palfrey.

heart cherry. One of a race of soft-fleshed heart-shaped sweet cherries, derived from the wild gean (Prunus avium). The Black Tartarian is the best-known variety.

heart'ed, a. 1. Having a heart; having a (specified kind of) heart (regarded as the seat of the affections, disposition, or character); as, warm-hearted; faint-hearted.
2. Shaped like a heart; cordate. Rare. Landor.
3. Seated or laid up in the heart.

heart'en (härt'n), v. t. [From HEART, v.] 1. To give heart to; to give zest or courage to; to encourage.
Hearten those that fight in your defense. Shak.
2. To restore fertility or strength to, as land. Obs. or R.

heart'felt' (hart'fĕlt'), a. Profoundly felt; sincere; earnest.

heart'-free', a. Having the affections disengaged.

hearth (härth), n. [ME harthe, herth, herthe, AS. heorð; akin to D. haard, heerd, Sw. härd, G. herd; cf. Goth. haúri a coal, Icel. hyrr embers, and L. cremare to burn.]
1. The pavement or floor, as of brick, stone, or metal, on which a fire is made, usually in a chimney; the floor of a fireplace; also, a corresponding part of a stove.
There was a fire on the hearth burning. Jer XXXVI. 22.
2. The fireside; the house or home itself, as the abode of comfort to its inmates and of hospitality to strangers.
Household talk and phrases of the hearth. Tennyson.
3. Irish Tribal Law. = FINE, a group of kindred.
4. Naut. A ship's galley, esp. the grate and cooking apparatus. Rare.
5. Metal. a The crucible, or lowest section, of a blast furnace, at and below the tuyères, where the molten metal and slag are collected. b The bottom of a finery, reverberatory, or open-hearth furnace, on which the ore or metal is exposed to the flame. c A bloomery. d The inside bottom of a cupola. e The fuel floor of a smith's forge.
6. Soldering. A box or brazier for charcoal.
7. Glass Manuf. A spreading frame or table.

hearth cinder. Slag produced in refining metals.

hearth ends. Metal. Fragments of lead ore ejected from the furnace by the blast.

hearth money. a Hearthpenny. b A tax formerly laid in England on hearths, each hearth (in all houses paying the church and poor rates) being taxed at two shillings; — called also chimney money, etc.

hearth'stone' (harth'stōn'), n. 1. Stone forming the hearth; hence, the fireside; home.
2. A soft stone, or composition of powdered stone and pipe clay, used to whiten or scour hearths, doorsteps, etc.

heart'i-ly (har'tĭ-lĭ), adv. [From HEARTY.] 1. From the heart; with all the heart; with sincerity.
I heartily forgive them. Shak.
2. With zest or zeal; actively; vigorously; willingly; cordially; as, to eat heartily; to detest heartily.
3. Abundantly; to the full; completely.
Syn. — Sincerely, cordially, zealously, vigorously, actively, warmly, eagerly, ardently, earnestly.

heart'leaf' (härt'lēf'), n. a Any of several American species of Asarum. b Spotted medic. c The floating heart.

heart'-leaved' wil'low (härt'lēvd'). A common broad-leaved American willow (Salix cordata).

heart'less, a. Without heart or a heart; specif.: a Destitute of courage or zeal; spiritless; despondent.
Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground Dryden.
b Destitute of feeling or affection, unsympathetic; cruel.
"The heartless parasites." Byron. c Of land, sterile. d Without power to stimulate or sustain.
— heart'less-ly, adv. — heart'less-ness, n heart'-rend'ing (-rĕn'dĭng; 87), a. Causing intense grief or anguish. — n. Heart-rending experience.

heart rot. A decay of the heart, or central cylinder, of a plant, esp. a tree, supposed to be due to the penetration of the tissues by the mycelium of a fungus.

hearts'ease' (harts'ēz'), n. Also heart's'-ease'. 1. [Properly two words, heart's ease.] Ease of heart; peace or tranquillity of mind or feeling. Shak.
2. a The pansy. b The wallflower. c The lady's-thumb. d In Australia, any species of Gratiola.

heart shell. Any of certain bivalve shells which have, when seen from the end, a heart-shaped outline; esp., the European Isocardia cor.

Heart Shell (Isocardia cor).

heart'sick' (hart'sĭk'), a. [AS. heortséoc.] Sick at heart, extremely depressed in spirits; very despondent, also, marked by, or expressive of, heartsickness — heart'-sick'en-ing, a — heart'-sick'ness, n.

heart'sore' (-sōr'; 201), a. Grieved at heart; indicative of such grief. — n. Soreness of heart, grief, also, its cause. heart'strick'en (-strĭk'n), a. Struck to the heart with grief, dismay, or the like. — heart'strick'en-ly, adv. — heart'strike' (-strīk'), v. t. Rare.

heart'string' (-strĭng'), n. A nerve or tendon once supposed to brace and sustain the heart; hence, the deepest emotions or affections.
Sobbing, as if a heartstring broke Moore.

heart'struck' (-strŭk'), a. 1. Heartstricken.
2. Driven to the heart; infixed in the mind. Obs. Shak.

heart'-swell'ing (-swĕl'ĭng), a. Ranking in, or swelling, the heart. "Heart-swelling hate." Spenser heart'wa'ter (-wô'tẽr), n. Veter. A febrile disease of sheep and goats in South Africa, transmitted by ticks, characterized by inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth with catarrhal discharge from the nostrils, followed by soreness of the feet and sometimes diarrhea, and often fatal, esp to young animals.

heart'-whole', a. [See WHOLE.] 1. Having the heart or affections free; not in love. Shak.
2. With unbroken courage; undismayed.
3. Of a single and sincere heart.
It he keeps heart-whole towards his Master Bunyan heart'wood' (härt'wo͝od'), n. 1. The hard central part of the trunk of a tree. See DURAMEN.

2. In Tasmania, the oleaceous tree Notelæa ligustrina, which has very hard wood.

heart'wort' (-wûrt'), n. a The birthwort (Aristolochia clematitis). b = HARTWORT. Obs. c A kind of mint. Obs. d Melilot. Obs.

heart'y (här'tĭ), a; HEART'I-ER (-tĭ-ẽr); HEART'I-EST.
1. Pertaining to, or proceeding from, the heart; warm, cordial; zealous; also, energetic, active; eager; as, a hearty welcome; hearty in supporting the government.
Full of hearty tears Marston
2. Exhibiting strength; sound; healthy, firm; not weak; as, a hearty man; hearty timber.
3. Promoting strength; nourishing; rich; abundant; as, hearty food; a hearty meal.
4. In good heart, fertile; — said of land.
Syn. — Sincere, real, unfeigned; cordial, earnest, warm, zealous, ardent, eager; active, vigorous. See CORDIAL.

heart'y, n.; pl. HEARTIES (-tĭz). Comrade; good fellow; — used esp. in addressing sailors; hence, a sailor. Archaic.

heat (hēt), n. [ME. hete, hæte, AS. hǣtu, hǣto, fr. hāt hot; akin to OHG. heizi heat, hizza, G. hitze, D. hitte, Dan. hede, Sw hetta, Goth. haitō fever. See HOT.] 1. A form of energy variously manifested to sense, as esp. in the effects of fire, the sun's rays, or friction. Heat was formerly supposed to be a subtle, imponderable fluid, to which was given the name caloric. It is now known to be a form of energy, probably the kinetic energy of confused oscillating motions of the particles or molecules of matter. Degrees of temperature represent intensities, not quantities, of heat, for when the same amount of heat is imparted to two bodies of equal mass but different substance one is found to be hotter than the other; and we say that the specific heats of the two substances are different. The heat added to a body usually causes change of volume. It may go partly or wholly to producing change of state by fusion or vaporization of the body, or may cause chemical reactions. It may be transformed in part into other kinds of energy, producing the phenomena of light, electricity, etc. The theoretical lower limit of temperature is the absolute zero (which see); the lowest temperature actually obtained is about −263° C. There is no theoretical upper limit, but the highest artificially obtained temperature is that of the electric arc (about 3600° C.). The most important source of heat for the earth is the sun, whose temperature is perhaps most authoritatively estimated to be about 6000° C. To it may be traced indirectly even the heat which we obtain from wood, coal, and other fuel. Heat may be conveyed by conduction, as along an iron rod; by convection, as through the rooms of a house by air currents; or by radiation, as from the sun to the earth. Energy traveling in the form of radiation is sometimes called radiant heat. Radiation, however, is not heat, but is the kinetic energy of vibration of the ether. It produces thermal effects when it meets bodies which absorb it, that is to say, bodies in which the regular undulatory motion of the ether is transformed into a confused motion of the material particles. Visible or light rays produce heat in proportion to their energy, but the term radiant heat is applied esp. to dark radiations of long wave length (infra-red rays), which are best known by their heating effects.

2. High temperature, as distinguished from low temperature, or cold; as, the heat of summer; heat of the body in fever, heat of fermentation, etc.; also, a period of heat; as, alternate heats and colds; a hot place, as, in the heat.

Else how had the world . . .
Avoided pinching cold and scorching heat? Milton

3. Physiol a The sensation of warmth caused by the stimulation of special sensory end organs at the heat spots (which see). Cf. TEMPERATURE. b Old Physiol. One of the fundamental qualities of bodies, elements, or humors; — opposed to cold. Obs or R.

The dry choler with his heat
By way of kind his proper seat Hath in the gall. Gower.

4. Indication of high temperature; appearance, condition, or color of a body, as indicating its temperature; redness, high color; flush; degree of temperature to which something is heated.

It has raised . . . heats in their faces. Addison.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white-flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.

5. Intensity of feeling; also, an instance of it. Specif.: a Rage; vehemence, as, the heat of battle or party. b Agitation of mind; inflammation or excitement; exasperation. "The heat and hurry of his rage." South. c Animation, as in discourse; ardor; fervency.

With all the strength and heat of eloquence. Addison.

6. A single complete operation of heating, as at a forge or in a furnace; as, to make a horseshoe in a certain number of heats; also, the quantity so heated.

7. A violent action unintermitted, a single effort.

[He] struck off at one heat the matchless tale of "Tam o' Shanter." J. C. Shairp.

Specif.: Sports. a Horse Racing A run for exercise in preparation for a race. Obs. b A single course in a race or other contest that consists of two or more courses, as, he won two heats out of three. c When contestants are too many to compete at once, a division of a contest in which the losers are eliminated.

8. Quality of being hot; pungency of flavor; passionateness; ardor or excitability. Obs. or R.

9. The height or stress of an action. Shak.

10 Sexual excitement, esp. in the female of mammals; the time or duration of such excitement.

heat of combustion. Thermochem., the heat evolved when a substance is completely burned in oxygen. It is usually expressed in calories per gram molecular weight of the compound burned or (as in the case of carbon) of the compound formed. — h. of formation. Thermochem., the heat evolved or absorbed when a compound is formed by direct union of its elements. It is usually expressed in calories per gram molecular weight of the compound. When heat is absorbed this value is negative. — h. of fusion, h. of vaporization. See LATENT HEAT. — h. of neutralization. Thermochem., heat evolved in the neutralization of acids and bases.

heat (hēt), v. t.; HEAT'ED; HEAT'ING. [ME. heten, AS. hǣtan, fr. hāt hot. See HOT.] 1. To make hot; to communicate heat to, or cause to grow warm; as, to heat an oven or furnace, an iron, or the like.

2. To make hot or feverish by action or emotion.

Pray, walk softly; do not heat your blood. Shak.

3. To excite ardor in; to rouse to action; to excite to excess; to inflame, as the passions.

A noble emulation heats your breast. Dryden.

4. To run over (ground) as in a race. Obs. or R. Shak.

heat, v. i. 1. To grow warm or hot by action of fire or friction, etc, or communication of heat; as, the water heats slowly; also, to grow warm or hot by fermentation or other chemical action; as, green hay heats in a mow.

2. To become excited or inflamed.

heat energy. Physics. That form of energy which manifests itself through thermal effects. When work is done upon a body and its equivalent appears in no other form, the body is heated, and we say that the work has been transformed into heat energy.

heat engine. Mach. & Thermodyn. An engine for converting heat into mechanical energy. Steam, gas, oil, and hot-air engines are the principal kinds of heat engines.

heat'er (hēt'ẽr), n. 1. One that heats; a contrivance or implement to impart heat or hold a thing to be heated; as: a A piece of iron heated and placed in a flatiron, box iron, tea urn, or the like. b A stove, furnace, steam radiator, or the like. c In sugar making, a heating pan for the juice or sirup. d Elec. A coil of platinum wire in a Nernst lamp to heat the light-giving filament to incandescence.

2. Weaving. A frog in a loose-reed loom.

heater plate. A metal plate to conduct heat from the flame to the reservoir of an oil lamp to keep the oil from congealing when the lamp is exposed to low temperatures.

heath (hēth), n. [ME. heth waste land, the plant heath, AS. hǣð; akin to D. & G. heide, Icel. heiðr waste land, Dan. hede, Sw. hed, Goth. haiþi field; cf. L. *buc*etum a cow pasture, Skr. kshētra field.] 1. A tract of waste land; esp., in Great Britain, an open, level area clothed with a characteristic vegetation consisting principally of undershrubs of the genus Erica.

2. a Orig., any plant growing on a heath (sense 1); later, any undershrub of the genus Erica; also, Calluna vulgaris, the common heath or heather, formerly included in Erica. b Bot. Specif., any species of Erica, or, often, any plant of the heath family (Ericaceæ). c (With a characterizing word.) 9 Phon. Of a vowel, the relative degree in which the active part of the tongue is approximated to the palate in articulating the sound. See Guide to Pron., §§ 42, 43.

Syn. — HEIGHT, ALTITUDE, ELEVATION. HEIGHT is the general term ; ALTITUDE suggests great or lofty height or (esp.) position above a given level, or in the air ; ELEVATION suggests esp. height to which something is regarded as raised ; both altitude and elevation apply to height as determined or reckoned by angular measurement ; as, the height (not altitude) of a candlestick, of a man, of a tree ; the height (or altitude) of a mountain ; the altitude of the clouds ; the altitude of a planet ; at a dizzy height ; the rarity of the air at high altitudes ; snow still lay on the higher elevations ; the balloon reached its highest elevation (or altitude) at noon ; the elevation (or altitude) of the pole. Fig., height suggests exalted position or the highest or extreme point ; elevation, rank or dignity ; altitude is less frequently fig. ; as, "the height of this great argument" (Milton), the height of folly, of the fashion ; elevation of style, of character, of mood, "the altitude of his virtue" (Shak.). See HIGH, RAISE.

heir (ãr), n. [ME. heir, eir, hair, OF. heir, eir, F. hoir, L. heres ; of uncertain origin. Cf. HEREDITARY, HERITAGE.]

1. One who inherits, or is entitled to succeed to the possession of, any property after the death of its owner (see INHERITANCE) ; specif. : a At the English Common Law, the one in whom the fee of the real property of an intestate is vested at his death by operation of law, called legal heir or heir at law, and distinguished from those who take it by will (devisees), by courtesy, or by right of dower, and from those who take the personal estate, whether legatees or next of kin taking by succession.

Unless the contrary be clear from the context the word heirs and heirs of the body are to be construed as words of limitation and not of purchase (cf. FEE), but where it is clear from the context that the term is used as a word of purchase, or where, as in some States of the United States, the rule has been changed by statute, heirs will be construed as a word of purchase.

135 Ill. 80 ; 201 Pa. 201.

The word heir has a technical significance, and, when uncontrolled by the context, designates the person appointed by law to succeed to the real estate in question in case of intestacy

88 Ill 251 ; 127 N. Y. 100

The word heirs must be regarded as a word of limitation, unless the superadded words make it clear that the testator employed it in a different sense from that annexed to it by the law.

109 Ind. 476

b Civil Law. The heres, or universal successor of a deceased person, whether by operation of law or by a will, succeeding originally to both his rights and his liabilities. See HERES. c In modern civil codes based upon the civil law, as in Europe, the person who succeeds to the (entire) estate of a person by operation of law or by testament, with a right of renunciation, and usually a right of entry with the "benefit of inventory." d Scots Law. Specif., the person in whom by operation of law the heritable estate and part or all of the movables of a decedent is vested upon his decease, called legal heir or heir at law ; also, one taking heritable property by destination, or, one who succeeds only to movable estate. e Loosely, any person taking more or less of the property of a deceased person, whether by operation of law, by virtue of a will, or in any of various other ways, — the persons intended by the word heir being determined from the intent, as shown by the context, including, besides other occasional senses : issue, children, or descendants, as in a will (73 Ind. 412, 416) or deed (132 Ill. 494) ; collateral heirs or parents (102 Pa. 581, 583 ; 156 N. Y. 181) ; devisees or legatees (106 Ala. 279) ; distributees (152 Mass. 457) ; legal representative (64 N. H. 36) ; next of kin (145 N. Y. 111 ; 62 N. J. Eq. 532).

2. One who receives or is entitled to receive any endowment or quality from a parent, or predecessor ; one to whom something should come ; the rightful future recipient or possessor, as, the heir of one's reputation or virtues.

And I his heir in misery alone. Pope

3. That which is produced ; offspring ; product. Obs. Shak.

heir apparent, Law, an heir whose right is indefeasible if he survives the ancestor ; — in distinction from heir presumptive. See also APPARENCY, JUS DELIBERANDI. — heir general, an heir at law. — h. of inventory, Scots Law, a beneficiary heir. — heir of line, Scots Law, an heir at law. — h. of provision, Scots Law, an heir by destination (which see). — h. of the body, an heir who is in the direct line of descent. — h. portioner, Scots Law, one of two or more female heirs taking in default of male heirs. Those in the same degree of relationship inherit equally, and their descendants take per stirpes. — h. presumptive, one who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would be his heir, but whose right to the inheritance may be defeated by the birth of a nearer relative, or by some other contingency. Cf. HEIR APPARENT. — h. whatsoever, Scots Law, an heir at law.

heir (ãr), v. t. ; HEIRED (ãrd), HEIR'ING. To inherit.

Although he heir the fortune of the earth. G. E. Woodberry heir'loom' (ãr'lōōm'), n. [heir + loom, in its earlier sense of implement, tool. See LOOM the frame.] Any furniture, movable, or personal chattel, which by law, special custom, will, or settlement descends to the heir along with the inheritance, hence, any piece of personal property owned by a family for several generations. The former "heirship movables" (which see) of Scots law were much like the heirlooms of the early English law (see 1st cit., below).

There are [in the 14th century] many traces of local customs which under the name of "principals" or "heri looms" will give him [the heir] various chattels, not merely his ancestor's sword and hauberk, but the best chattels of every kind. Pollock & Maitl.

Attempts to introduce the law of heirlooms into Scotland have met with indifferent success Erskine's Principles.

heir'ship (ãr'shĭp), n. State, character, or privileges of an heir ; right of inheriting ; inheritance.

heirship movables. Scots Law. Certain movables (the best of certain kinds) which certain heirs were formerly entitled to take, besides the heritable estate. Under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 101 (1868) they go like other movables to the executry. Cf. HEIRLOOM.

Hel (hĕl), n. Also Hel'a (hĕl'ä). [Icel. Hel.] Norse Myth. Daughter of Loki, goddess of the dead and queen of the lower world. Her dwelling was under one of the roots of the sacred ash tree Yggdrasill. The underworld itself (the abode of the dead, comparable to the Greek Hades) was also called Hel, Niflhel, the abode of the damned, being only a restricted region (comparable to Tartarus). See NINE WORLDS, RAGNAROK, YGGDRASILL.

helicoid cyme. = BOSTRYX. — h. parabola, Math., the shape assumed by a parabola, or the curve formed by the upper ends of its ordinates, when its plane is deformed by wrapping its axis along a circle round a circular cylinder.

hel'i-coid, n. Geom. Any of several screw-shaped surfaces. a Developable helicoid, a surface whose generatrix constantly touches a fixed helix. b Oblique helicoid, a warped surface whose generatrix glides along a fixed helix at a constant angle with its axis. When this angle is right, the helicoid is a right helicoid and developable.

hel'i-coi'dal (hĕl'ĭ-koi'dăl), a. Helicoid. — hel'i-coi'dal-ly, adv. — helicoidal saw, Quarrying, etc, a device consisting of an endless cord, composed of three steel wires twisted together, which is supplied with sand and water and drawn along marble or other stone to cut it.

Hel'i-con (hĕl'ĭ-kŏn), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἑλικών.] 1. A mountain or mountain range in Bœotia, in Greece, supposed by the Greeks to be the residence of Apollo and the Muses. It contained the fountains of Aganippe and Hippocrene. The name is often used allusively of poetry and poets. "Helicon's harmonious springs" T. Gray.

Helicon, 3.

2. [l. c.] Acous. An ancient instrument to illustrate musical intervals, consisting of strings fixed across a resonance box so that their lengths could be geometrically altered.
3. [l. c.] Music. A deep-toned brass wind instrument with a large circular tube that may be carried round the body when marching, and is generally thus used in military bands in preference to the bass tuba, which it is like in quality and compass.

Hel'i-co'ni-a (hĕl'ĭ-kō'nĭ-a), n. [NL., fem. of L. Heliconius of Helicon.] Bot. A rather large genus of handsome musaceous foliage plants, natives of tropical America, having dry 3-celled fruit. H. bihai, the balisier or wild plantain, is often cultivated. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Hel'i-co'ni-an (-ăn), a. [L. Heliconius.] 1. Of or pertaining to Helicon. "Heliconian honey" Tennyson
2. [l. c.] Zool Like, or pert. to, the subfamily Heliconiinæ. — n. A butterfly of that subfamily.

Hel'i-co'ni-us (-ŭs), n. [NL See HELICON.] Zool A large genus of nymphalid butterflies, the type of a subfamily, Hel'i-co-ni-i'næ (-kō-nĭ-ī'nē), which is represented by many genera and species in tropical America. The fore wings are long and narrow, and the hind wings small and round. One species, H. melpomene charitonius, black with yellow bands, occurs in the Gulf States.

hel'i-cop'ter (-kŏp'tĕr), n. [F. hélicoptère; Gr. ἕλιξ, -ικος, spiral + πτερόν wing.] Aëronautics. A screw-propelled flying machine, esp. one in which lifting is accomplished by two horizontal propellers revolving in opposite directions.

Hel'ic-te'res (hĕl'ĭk-tē'rēz, often hē-lĭk'tĕr-ēz), n. [NL, fr. Gr. ἑλικτήρ anything twisted. See HELIX.] Bot. A large genus of sterculiaceous trees, natives of the tropics of both hemispheres. They have axillary flowers, and fruits consisting of five twisted carpels. The West Indian species are called screw trees.

he-lic'tite (hē-lĭk'tīt), n. [Gr. ἑλικτός twisted + -ite. See HELIX] A curious twisted form of stalactite.

he'li-o- (hē'lĭ-ō-). Combining form fr. Gr. ἥλιος, the sun

He'li-o-car'pus (-kar'pŭs), n. [NL. ; helio- + Gr καρπός fruit, in allusion to the sunlike appearance of the fruit] Bot. A small genus of tropical American tiliaceous trees, often of large size, having cordate, usually 3-lobed leaves, small cymose flowers, and compressed orbicular capsules ciliate with radiating bristles around the margin.

he'li-o-cen'tric (-sĕn'trĭk) } a. [helio- + -centric, cen- he'li-o-cen'tri-cal (-trĭ-kăl) } trical.] Astron. Pert. to the sun's center, or appearing to be seen from it, having, or relating to, the sun as a center; — opposed to geocentric.
heliocentric parallax See PARALLAX. — h. place, latitude, longitude, etc (of a heavenly body), the position, latitude, longitude, etc, of the body as viewed from the sun. Heliocentric latitude is measured from the plane of the ecliptic, and at right angles to it, heliocentric longitude, from a plane perpendicular to the ecliptic, and passing through the sun and the first point of Aries.

he'li-o-cen'tri-cism (hē'lĭ-ō-sĕn'trĭ-sĭz'm), n. The heliocentric theory, which assumes the sun as the center of reference or consideration.

he'li-o-cen-tric'i-ty (-sĕn-trĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality or state of being heliocentric.

he'li-o-don (hē'lĭ-ō-dŏn), n [NL. ; helio- + Gr ὀδός way, path.] Astron. A mechanical device for illustrating the sun's apparent motion, etc.

he'li-o-e-lec'tric, a. [helio- + electric.] Astrophysics. Of or pertaining to electricity radiant from the sun.

He'li-o-gab'a-lus (hē'lĭ-ō-găb'a-lŭs), n. [Incorrect fr. Elagabalus, fr. Elugabal, Syro-Phœnician sun god.] The adopted name of Varius Avitus Bassianus, a Roman emperor (218–222 A D.), infamous for shameless profligacy. —

2. An instrument for taking photographs of the sun.
3. An apparatus for telegraphing by means of the sun's rays thrown from a mirror. It is used chiefly in military operations. Cf. HELIOTROPE, 4.
4 An apparatus for measuring the intensity of sunlight.

he'li-o-graph', v. t. & i.; HE'LI-O-GRAPHED' (-grăft'); HE'LI-O-GRAPH'ING. 1 To signal by means of the heliograph.
2. To photograph, esp. by means of the astronomical camera known as the photo-heliograph.

he'li-o-graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk) } a. Of or pertaining to heli-he'li-o-graph'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } ography or the heliograph. heliographic chart, a map of the sun with its spots.

2. Photography. Obs.
3. An early photographic process invented by Nicéphore Niepce, and still used in photo-engraving. It consists essentially in exposing under a design or in a camera a polished metal plate coated with a preparation of asphalt, and subsequently treating the plate with a suitable solvent. The light renders insoluble those parts of the film which it strikes, and so a permanent image is formed, which can be etched upon the plate by the use of acid.
4. The system, art, or practice of telegraphing, or signaling, with the heliograph.

he'li-o-gra-vure' (hē'lĭ-ō-grā-vūr'; -grā'vŭr), n. [F. héliogravure.] Photog. Any of various photo-engraving processes by which intaglio engravings are made. The term was originally applied to various early processes producing engravings printed either like copperplates or like woodcuts, as that perfected by Amand Durand, but the term is now used generally as synonymous with the more common term photogravure.

he'li-ol'o-gy (-ŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [helio- + -logy.] Astron The science of the sun, its description, constitution, and radiant energy. — he'li-ol'o-gist (-jĭst), n.

he'li-om'e-ter (-ŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [helio- + -meter: cf. F. héliomètre.] Astron. A double-image micrometer (see under DOUBLE, a.). It was devised originally for measuring the diameter of the sun, but is now used for accurate measurement of any short arc of the celestial sphere.

he'li-o-met'ric (-ō-mĕt'rĭk) } a Of or pert to the heliom-he'li-o-met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl) } eter or heliometry — he'-li-o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

he'li-om'e-try (-ŏm'ē-trĭ), n. The art or practice of measuring with the heliometer.

he'li-oph'i-lous (-ŏf'ĭ-lŭs), a. [helio- + -philous.] Attracted by sunlight he'li-o-pho'bi-a (hē'lĭ-ō-fō'bĭ-a), n. [helio- + -phobia.] Med Morbid fear of sunlight.

he'li-o-pho'bic (-fō'bĭk; -phŏb'ĭk), a. Avoiding the sun, shade-loving, as a plant; also, pert. to heliophobia.

he'li-o-pho-tog'ra-phy (-fō-tŏg'rā-fĭ), n. [helio- + photography] Any photographic process using sunlight.

He'li-op'sis (hē'lĭ-ŏp'sĭs), n [NL., helio- + -opsis.] Bot. A small genus of American asteraceous herbs closely related to Helianthus, but distinguished by the fertile ray flowers and conical receptacle.

He'li-os (hē'lĭ-ŏs), n. [Gr ἥλιος sun; Ἥλιος.] Gr. Myth. The sun god, represented as driving a four-horse chariot through the heavens. See APOLLO, PHAETHON, HYPERION.

he'li-o-scope' (hē'lĭ-ō-skōp'), n. [helio- + -scope: cf. F. hélioscope.] Astron. A telescope or instrument for viewing the sun without injury to the eyes, as through colored glasses, or with mirrors which reflect but a small portion of light, or with reduction of the light by a Nicol prism. — he'li-o-scop'ic (-skŏp'ĭk), a. — he'li-os'co-py (-ŏs'kō-pĭ), n.

he'li-o'sis (-ō'sĭs), n. [NL, fr. Gr. ἡλίωσις, fr. ἥλιος sun]
1. Bot. The production of burned or discolored spots on the leaves of plants by the concentration of sunlight upon them, as through the glass of a greenhouse.
2 Med a = HELIOTHERAPY. b = SUNSTROKE.

he'li-o-stat' (hē'lĭ-ō-stăt'), n. [helio- + Gr. στατός placed, standing: cf. F. héliostat] An instrument consisting of a mirror mounted on an axis moved by clockwork, by which a sunbeam is made stationary, being steadily reflected to one spot during the whole of its diurnal period; also, a geodetic heliotrope — he'li-o-stat'ic (-stăt'ĭk), a.

he'li-o-tax'is (-tăk'sĭs), n. [NL., helio- + taxis.] Biol. Phototaxis in which sunlight is the stimulus. — he'li-o-tac'tic (-tĭk), a.

he'li-o-ther'a-py (-thĕr'ā-pĭ), n. [helio- + therapy.] Med. Treatment of disease by sun baths he'li-o-ther-mom'e-ter (-thĕr-mŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [helio- + thermometer] An instrument for measuring reduction of solar heat by the atmosphere, consisting of a black-bulb thermometer in a glass-covered, black-lined case.

he'li-o-trope (hē'lĭ-ō-trōp), n. [F. héliotrope, L. heliotropium, Gr. ἡλιοτρόπιον, ἥλιος the sun + τρέπειν to turn, τρόπος turn See HELIAC; TROPE.] 1. Lit, a plant which turns toward the sun; hence: a Among the early herbalists, any plant of this nature, as the sunflower, the marigold, etc. Cf. 2d GOLD b. Obs. b Now, an herb of the genus Heliotropium, esp. H. peruvianum, the common garden species; turnsole.
2. Min. = BLOODSTONE a.
3 Anc. Astron. An instrument or dial to show the time of equinoxes and solstices.
4. An instrument used in geodetic surveying for making long-distance observations by means of the sun's rays thrown from a mirror. Cf. HELIOGRAPH, 3.
5. a A light tint of purple, — the color of the flowers in the common garden heliotrope; hence, an azo dyestuff imparting a heliotrope color. b The scent of the heliotrope.

he'li-ot'ro-pism (hē'lĭ-ŏt'rō-pĭz'm), n. [helio- + -tropism.] Plant Physiol. The tendency of certain growing organs to respond to the stimulus of sunlight by movements or curvatures. It may be positive, as in the case of erect stems, or negative, as in roots (cf PHOTOTAXIS). Negative heliotropism is usually called apheliotropism. — he'li-o-trop'ic (-ō-trŏp'ĭk), he'li-o-trop'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. — he'li-o-trop'i-cal-ly, adv.

He'li-o-tro'pi-um (hē'lĭ-ō-trō'pĭ-ŭm), n [NL., fr. Gr. ἡλιοτρόπιον heliotrope. See HELIOTROPE] Bot. A large genus of herbs or undershrubs, mostly tropical, with small flowers in one-sided spikes, and 4-parted fruit. H. Europæum is a common garden species.

he'li-ot'ro-py (hē'lĭ-ŏt'rō-pĭ), n. = HELIOTROPISM.

he'li-o-type' (hē'lĭ-ō-tīp'), n. [helio- + type.] A process for making pictures by means of the sun's light, in which a film of bichromated gelatin is exposed under a negative, and then developed in water, which dissolves away the parts not hardened by the light. The film is then transferred to paper, and printed from in a press. Also, a picture made by this process.

he'li-o-trope' (-trōp'), v. t. To expose to the sun's rays.

he'li-o-trop'ic (-trŏp'ĭk) } a. [helio- + -tropic.] Of or he'li-o-trop'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } pert. to heliotropism; turning toward the sun.

he'li-o-trop'i-um (-trŏp'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.] = HELIOTROPE.

he'li-o-trop'ism (-trō-pĭz'm), n. = HELIOTROPISM.

he'li-o-trop'ist (-trō-pĭst), n. [helio- + -tropist.] A sun worshiper — he'li-ol'a-trous (-trŭs), a. — he'li-ol'a-try (-trĭ), n.

he'li-o-tube' (hē'lĭ-ō-tūb'), n. [helio- + -tube.] 1 A fossil coral of the family Heliolitidæ
2. Min Aventurine feldspar

He'li-o-lit'i-dæ (-lĭt'ĭ-dē), n pl. [NL.] Paleon. A family of Paleozoic tabulate corals probably related to the Helioporidæ, but having 12 radial septa in the larger tubes. He'li-o-li'tes (-lĭ'tēz), abundant from the Ordovician to the Devonian, is the type genus.

he'li-on (hē'lĭ-ŏn), n. A heliograph. Colloq. [HELIOCENTRIC.

he'li-o-cen'tri-cal-ly, adv. of he'li-o-chro'mo-type (hē'lĭ-ō-krō'mō-tīp), n [heliochrome + -type.] = HELIOCHROME he'li-o-chro'my (hē'lĭ-ō-krō'-mĭ), n. = COLOR PHOTOGRAPHY

he'li-ol'a-ter (-ŏl'ā-tĕr), n [helio- + -later.] A sun worshiper — he'li-ol'a-trous (-trŭs), a. — he'li-ol'a-try (-trĭ), n.

he'li-o-lite' (hē'lĭ-ō-līt'), n. [helio- + -lite.] 1 A fossil coral of the family Heliolitidæ
2. Min Aventurine feldspar

He'li-o-lit'i-dæ (-lĭt'ĭ-dē), n pl. [NL.] Paleon. A family of Paleozoic tabulate corals probably related to the Helioporidæ, but having 12 radial septa in the larger tubes. He'li-o-li'tes (-lĭ'tēz), abundant from the Ordovician to the Devonian, is the type genus.

he'li-on lamp (hē'lĭ-ŏn). [From Gr. ἥλιος sun.] Elec. An incandescent lamp having a filament largely of silicon deposited on a carbon filament. The light is very white.

he'li-o-phyl'lite (-ō-fĭl'līt), n. [helio- + -phyll + -ite.] Min. = ECHEMITE.

He'li-op'o-lis (-ŏp'ō-lĭs). D. Bib.

He'li-op'o-ra (-ŏp'ō-rā), n [NL. ; helio- + Gr. πόρος a passage.] The typical genus of corals of the family Helioporidæ It is found fossil, and a species known as blue coral still exists in East Indian waters.

He'li-o-por'i-dæ (-pŏr'ĭ-dē), n. pl [NL.] Zool. A family of alcyonarian tabulate corals, in which the corallum is composed of tubes of two kinds, larger ones called autopores, and more numerous smaller ones called siphonopores. the latter occupied by simpler polyps without tentacles or reproductive organs he'li-op'ti-con (-ŏp'tĭ-kŏn), n [NL See HELIO-; OPTIC.] A porte-lumiere He'li-or'nis (-ôr'nĭs). n. [NL ; helio- + Gr. ὄρνις bird.] Zool A genus of birds of the finfoot family, consisting of a single species (H. fulica) of Central and South America.

He'li-or-nith'i-dæ (-ôr-nĭth'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] See FINFOOT.

he'li-o-trop'er (hē'lĭ-ō-trōp'ĕr), n. An operator of a heliotrope he'li-ot'ro-pin (-ŏt'rō-pĭn), he'li-ot'ro-pine (-pīn; -pēn), n. = PIPERONAL. [ropism. Rare |

hem'i-hy'drate (-hī'drāt), n. [hemi- + hydrate.] Chem. A hydrate containing half a molecule of water to one of the compound forming the hydrate.

hem'i-mel-lit'ic (-mĕl-ĭt'ĭk), a. Org. Chem. Designating a crystalline acid, $C_6H_3(CO_2H)_3$, a derivative of benzene, having half as many (3) carboxyl groups as mellitic acid.

hem'i-morph (hĕm'ĭ-môrf), n. [hemi- + -morph.] Cryst. A hemimorphic form or crystal.

hem'i-mor'phic (-môr'fĭk), a. [hemi- + -morphic.] Cryst. Unsymmetrical in form as regards the two ends of an axis. See HOLOMORPHIC. — hem'i-mor'phism (-fĭz'm), hem'i-mor'phy (hĕm'ĭ-môr'fĭ), n.

hem'i-mor'phite (-fīt), n. Min. Calamine, or hydrous zinc silicate; — so called from its hemimorphic crystals.

Hem'i-my-a'ri-a (-mĭ-ā'rĭ-a), n. pl. [NL., hemi- + Myaria.] Zool. A suborder of tunicates of the order Thaliacea coextensive in recent classifications with the family Salpidæ (see SALPA), — so named from the incomplete muscular rings about the body.

he-mi'na (hĕ-mī'nă), n.; pl. HEMINÆ (-nē). [L., fr Gr. ἡμίνα.] 1. A measure of capacity of ancient Greece and Rome, equal to half a sextarius (about half a pint, 0.271 liter); hence, a former liquid measure in medicine.

2. A former grain measure of southern France, equivalent to about half a hectoliter.

hem'i-ol'ic (hĕm'ĭ-ŏl'ĭk), a. [Gr. ἡμιόλιος half as much again, ἡμι- (see HEMI-) + ὅλος whole.] Gr. & Lat Pros. Of (the proportion) three to two; characterized by such a proportion between thesis and arsis; as, a hemiolic foot. See PÆONIC, & RHYTHM, 2 b.

Hem'i-o-ni'tis (-ō-nī'tĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἡμιονῖτις a kind of fern.] Bot. A small genus of polypodiaceous ferns found in the tropics of both hemispheres. They have simple cordate, sagittate, or palmate fronds, the fertile taller, and covered with lines of naked sporangia.

hem'i-par'a-site (-păr'a-sīt), n. [hemi- + parasite.] Bot. A parasitic plant containing more or less chlorophyll and therefore capable of performing photosynthesis, as the mistletoe. — hem'i-par'a-sit'ic (-sĭt'ĭk), a hem'i-pe'nis (-pē'nĭs), n.; pl. -NES (-nēz). [hemi- + penis.] Zool. One of the paired copulatory organs of many reptiles (lizards and snakes).

hem'i-pep'tone (-pĕp'tōn), n. [hemi- + peptone.] Physiol. Chem. A peptone assumed to be formed in tryptic digestion, differing from antipeptone in easily undergoing further decomposition. It has not been isolated.

he-mip'ic (hĕ-mĭp'ĭk) } a. [G. hemipinsäure.] Org.
hem'i-pin'ic (hĕm'ĭ-pĭn'ĭk) } Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline acid, $C_6H_2(OCH_3)_2(CO_2H)_2$, obtained by the oxidation of opianic acid and in other ways.

hem'i-plane (hĕm'ĭ-plān), n. [hemi- + plane.] Geom. In the theory of functions, a half plane.

hem'i-ple'gi-a (-plē'jĭ-a), n. [NL.; hemi- + -plegia: cf. Gr. ἡμιπληξ a.] Med. A palsy that affects one side only of the body. — hem'i-pleg'ic (-plĕj'ĭk; -plē'jĭk), a.

hem'i-prism (hĕm'ĭ-prĭz'm), n. [hemi- + prism.] Cryst. A prism consisting of but two parallel faces, as in the triclinic system. — hem'i-pris-mat'ic (-prĭz-măt'ĭk), a.

He-mip'ter-a (hĕ-mĭp'tĕr-a), n. pl. [NL.; hemi- + Gr. πτερόν wing.] Zool. A large order of true insects having a jointed proboscis, including four sharp stylets (probably representing the mandibles and maxillæ), adapted for piercing the tissues and sucking the blood or juices of animals and plants. It includes many forms very destructive to cultivated plants, and some troublesome parasites of animals and man. Among its members are the insects properly termed bugs, though in popular usage the word bug is not restricted to insects of any particular group. The order Hemiptera consists of the two large suborders Heteroptera and Homoptera, differing greatly in the structure of the wings, which are, however, lacking in many forms of both groups. In addition, the order includes the suborder Anoplura (containing the true lice), and sometimes the Thysanoptera. — he-mip'ter-al (hĕ-mĭp'tĕr-ăl), a. — he-mip'ter-an (-ăn), a. & n. — he-mip'ter-ous (-ŭs), a.

hem'i-pyr'a-mid (hĕm'ĭ-pĭr'a-mĭd), n. [hemi- + pyramid.] Cryst. A pyramid consisting of but two pairs of parallel faces, as in the monoclinic system.

hem'i-sap'ro-phyte (-săp'rō-fīt), n. Bot. A partial saprophyte; a plant containing a small amount of chlorophyll, but obtaining most of its food from humus, as certain orchids, etc. — hem'i-sap'ro-phyt'ic (-fĭt'ĭk), a.

hem'i-sphere (hĕm'ĭ-sfēr), n [L. hemisphaerium, Gr. ἡμισφαιριον, ἡμι- half + σφαῖρα sphere: cf F. hémisphère. See HEMI-, SPHERE.] 1. A half sphere, one of the halves into which a central plane cuts a sphere.

2. Half of the celestial or terrestrial globe, or a projection of the same in a map or picture. The terrestrial hemispheres are customarily divided (1) by the equator, into Northern and Southern, or (2) by a meridian, so that North and South America are contained in the Western Hemisphere, and the other continents chiefly in the Eastern Hemisphere. The celestial hemispheres are customarily divided by the horizon, the equinoctial, or the ecliptic.

3. Fig.: a A realm; a sphere, as, the hemisphere of one's knowledge. b The inhabitants of a hemisphere.

4. Anat. & Zoöl. A cerebral hemisphere. See BRAIN.

hem'i-spher'ic (-sfĕr'ĭk) } a [Cf. F. hémisphérique.]
hem'i-spher'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } Of, pertaining to, or resembling, a hemisphere — hem'i-spher'i-cal-ly, adv hem'i-spher'i-co- (hĕm'ĭ-sfĕr'ĭ-kō-). Combining form for hemispherical.

hem'i-sphe'roid (hĕm'ĭ-sfē'roid), n. [hemi- + spheroid.] One of the halves into which a central plane cuts a spheroid. — hem'i-sphe-roi'dal (-sfē-roi'dăl), a.

hem'i-stich (hĕm'ĭ-stĭk), n. [L. hemistichium, Gr. ἡμιστιχιον; ἡμι- half + στίχος row, line, verse: cf. F. hémistiche.] Half a poetic verse or line, esp. as divided by a cæsura, etc., an incomplete verse or line; a metrically independent colon or group of feet, of less than the regular length.

he-mis'ti-chal (hĕ-mĭs'tĭ-kăl; hĕm'ĭ-stĭk-ăl), a. Pertaining to, or written in, hemistichs; also, by, or according to, hemistichs; as, a hemistichal division of a verse.

hem'i-sys'to-le (hĕm'ĭ-sĭs'tō-lē), n. Physiol. Contraction of only one ventricle of the heart. In certain rare cases of insufficiency of the mitral valve, both ventricles may contract simultaneously, as in a normal heart, alternating with contraction of the right ventricle alone. This is called intermittent hemisystole.

hem'i-trope (hĕm'ĭ-trōp), a. [hemi- + -trope: cf. F. hémitrope.] Half turned round; half inverted, Cryst., having a twinned structure. See TWIN.

hem'i-trope, n. Cryst A hemitrope crystal; a twin.

hem'i-trop'ic (-trŏp'ĭk), a Cryst Hemitrope.

hem'i-tro-pism (hĕm'ĭ-trō-pĭz'm), he-mit'ro-py (hĕ-mĭt'rō-pĭ), n. Quality or state of being hemitrope.

he-mit'ro-pous (hĕ-mĭt'rō-pŭs), a. [See HEMITROPE.] Turned half round, half inverted; Bot., amphitropous.

hem'i-typ'ic (hĕm'ĭ-tĭp'ĭk), a. [hemi- + typic.] Imperfectly typical — n. One that is hemitypic.

hem'lock (hĕm'lŏk), n. [ME. hemeluc, humlok, AS. hemlic, hymlic.] 1. Any of several poisonous apiaceous herbs having finely cut leaves and small white flowers, esp. Conium maculatum and species of Cicuta.

2. Any of the pinaceous trees (genus Tsuga) more fully designated by the name hemlock spruce, or their valuable hard wood; esp., T. canadensis, called also Canadian hemlock. See HEMLOCK SPRUCE.

3. Pharm. = CONIUM.

hemlock chervil. A European apiaceous herb (Caucalis anthriscus) with finely divided leaves and white flowers.

hemlock dropwort. a A European poisonous apiaceous herb of the genus Œnanthe, esp. Œ. crocata. b A similar plant of the southern United States (Orypolis rigida).

Hem'er-o-bap'tist (hĕm'ĕr-ō-băp'tĭst), n [Gr. ἡμεροβαπτιστής one of a Christian sect who were baptized daily; ἡμερα day + βαπτιστής baptizer.] Eccl. Hist. A member of an ancient Jewish sect which practiced daily ceremonial ablution; also, a member of a similar early Christian sect. — Hem'er-o-bap'tism (-tĭz'm), n.

Hem'er-o'bi-us (-ō'bĭ-ŭs). n. [NL.; Gr. ἡμερα day + βίος life] Zool. A genus of lacewing flies. They are usually dark-colored, with wings mottled with smoky brown. The larvæ are carnivorous (see APHIS WOLF.) The genus is the type of a family, Hem'er-o-bi'i-dæ (-ō-bĭ'ĭ-dē), which sometimes includes also Chrysopa (which see) and allied genera — hem'er-o'bi-an (-ō'bĭ-ăn), a. & n.

hem'e-ryth'rin, n. = HÆMOERYTHRIN.

-hemia. See -ÆMIA.

hem'i-a-blep'si-a (hĕ-mĭ'ĭ-a-blĕp'sĭ-a), n [NL.; hemi- + ablepsia] = HEMIANOPSIA.

hem'i-a-chro'ma-top'si-a (-a-krō'ma-tŏp'sĭ-a), n [NL.] Med. Achromatopsia limited to half of the visual field. [SUMOSE] hem'i-al'bu'min, n. = HEMIALBUMOSE.

hem'i-al'bu-mose, n. Physiol. Chem. See ALBUMOSE.

hem'i-al-bu'mo-su'ri-a (-ăl-bū'mō-sū'rĭ-a), n [NL.] Presence of hemialbumose in the urine hem'i-amb' (hĕm'ĭ-ămb'), n. [hemi- + iamb.] Gr & Lat Pros. An iambic dimeter catalectic.

hem'i-am'bly-o'pi-a (-ăm'blĭ-ō'pĭ-a), n. [NL.] Med Dimness of vision due to an impaired condition of one half of each retina hem'i-an-a-cu'si-a (-ăn'a-kū'sĭ-a; -zĭ-a), n. [NL.; hemi- + an- not + Gr. ἀκουσις hearing] Med. Deafness affecting one ear.

hem'i-an'æs-the'si-a, -an'es-the'si-a (-ăn'ĕs-thē'sĭ-a; -zhĭ-a), n. [NL.] Med Unilateral anæsthesia.

hem'i-a-nat'ro-pous (-a-năt'rō-pŭs), a = AMPHITROPOUS.

hem'i-an-o'pi-a (-ăn-ō'pĭ-a), hem'i-an-op'si-a (-ăn-ŏp'sĭ-a), n. [NL.] Med. Blindness in one half of the visual field, affecting one or both eyes — hem'i-an-o'pic (-ō'pĭk), hem'i-an-op'tic (-ŏp'tĭk), a.

hem'i-a-tax'i-a (-a-tăk'sĭ-a), n [NL.] Med. Unilateral ataxia.

hem'i-ath'e-to'sis (-ăth'ē-tō'sĭs), n [NL.] Med Unilateral athetosis hem'i-at'ro-phy (-ăt'rō-fĭ), n. Med. Unilateral atrophy.

Hem'i-ba-sid'i-i (hĕm'ĭ-bā-sĭd'ĭ-ī), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. Syn. of HEMIBASIDIOMYCETES.

hem'i-ba-thyb'i-al (-bă-thĭb'ĭ-*a*l), a. Zoögeog Of or pertaining to the marine faunal division between the Littoral and the Bathybial zones.

hem'i-ben'thic, a. Zool Designating benthic animals which have a planktonic stage or phase. [of HEMIC.

he'mic (hē'mĭk; hĕm'ĭk), a. See PETROGRAPHY.

hem'i-car'di-a (hĕ-mĭ'ĭ-kär'dĭ-a), n. [NL.] Anat. A lateral half of a four-chambered heart. — hem'i-car'di-ac (-ăk), a hem'i-carp, n. A mericarp. Rare.

hem'i-ce-pha'li-a (-sē-fā'lĭ-a), n. [NL.; hemi- + Gr κεφαλή head.] Terat. Monstrosity marked by absence of one half of the skull and brain.

hem'i-cir'cle, n A semicircle. R — hem'i-cir'cu-lar, a R hem'i-col'lin (-kŏl'ĭn), n. Physiol Chem A peptonelike substance, soluble in alcohol, obtained by boiling gelatin a long time with water. [Obs.]

hem'i-cra'ni-a (hĕm'ĭ-krā'nĭ-a), n. [L. See HEMI-, CRANIUM] Med. Hemialgia of the head. — hem'i-cran'ic (-krăn'ĭk; -krā'nĭk), a. [Hemicrania hem'i-cra'ny (-nĭ), n Med. = Hem'i-dac'ty-lus, n. [NL. See HEMI-, DACTYLUS.] Zool A widely distributed genus of geckos, having the digits dilated and provided with two rows of lamellæ on the under side — hem'i-dae'ty-lous, a.

hem'i-di'a-pen'te (hĕm'ĭ-dī'a-pĕn'tē), n. Gr. Music. A diminished fifth.

hem'i-di'a-pho-re'sis (-dī'a-fō-rē'sĭs), n. [NL.] Med Unilateral diaphoresis, or sweating.

hem'i-di'tone (-dī'tōn), n. Gr. Music A minor third hem'i-dro'sis (-drō'sĭs). Var. of HÆMATIDROSIS.

hem'i-dys'æs-the'si-a, -dys es-the'si-a (-dĭs'ĕs-thē'sĭ-a ; -zhĭ-a), n [NL.] Med. Unilateral dysæsthesia.

hem'i-dys-tro'phi-a (-dĭs-trō'fĭ-a). n [NL.] Bot. A weakened condition of plants, due to starvation. Rare.

hem'i-el'y-tron, hem'i-el'y-trum, etc Vars. of HEMELYTRON, HEMELYTRUM, etc.

He-mig'a-lus (hē-mĭg'a-lŭs), n. [NL.; hemi- + Gr. γαλή, γαλέη, a kind of weasel.] Zool. A genus of East Indian civet cats. He-mig'a-le (-lē) is a synonym. The best-known species (H. hardwickii) is light gray with broad transverse dark stripes.

He-mig'a-nus (-a-nŭs), n [NL.; hemi- + Gr γάνος brightness, polish; — in allusion to the enamel of the incisors] Paleon. A genus of mammals of the order Ganodonta from the Lower Eocene of North America. It was as large as a medium-sized dog, with powerful jaws, and feet comparable to those of the ground sloths hem'i-gloss-a'ti-a (hĕm'ĭ-glŏs-ā'shĭ-a), n. [NL.] Med. Lateral inflammation of the tongue.

he-mig'na-thous (hĕ-mĭg'nă-thŭs), a. [hemi- + -gnathous.] Zool. Having one jaw short, as certain birds and fishes

hem'i-he'dry (-drĭ), n. Hemihedrism.

hem'i-hol'o-he'dral, a. [hemi- + holohedral] Cryst. Presenting or designating hemihedral forms, in which half the sectants have the full number of planes, as tetrahedrons and sphenoids hem'i-hy'per-æs-the'si-a, -hy'per-es-the'si-a, n. [NL.] Med. Unilateral hyperæsthesia.

hem'i-leth'ar-gy, n. A condition of partial lethargy — hem'i-le-thar'gic, a hem'i-me-lan'o-la (hĕm'ĭ-mĕ-lăn'ō-*l*a), n. pl. [NL.] Zool. Hemimetabolic insects.

hem'i-met'a-bol'ic (-mĕt'a-bŏl'ĭk), hem'i-me-tab'o-lous (-mĕ-tăb'ō-lŭs), a. Zool Having an incomplete metamorphosis; — said of those insects in which the larva much resembles the adult.

hem'i-me-tab'o-ly (-lĭ), n. Zool Incomplete metamorphosis.

hem'i-mor'phous (hĕm'ĭ-môr'fŭs), n HEMIMORPHIC.

he'min. Var. of HÆMIN heming. † HEMMING.

hemiole, n Hemiolia. Obs hem'i-o'li-a (hĕm'ĭ-ō'lĭ-a), n. [NL See HEMIOLIC] Medieval Music. a The interval of a perfect fifth. To sound it the monochord string was shortened to two thirds b A triplet; three notes in place of two he-mi'o-nus (hĕ-mī'ō-nŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἡμίονος a half ass, a mule] Zool. A specific name of the kiang (Equus kiang, syn. E. hemionus); — sometimes used as a book name of this animal.

hem'i-o'pi-a (hĕm'ĭ-ō'pĭ-a), -op'si-a (-ŏp'sĭ-a), n [NL.; hemi- + -opia, -opsia] = HEMIANOPSIA — hem'i-o-p'ic (-ŏp'ĭk), a.

hem'i-or'tho-type, a [hemi- + ortho- + -type.] Cryst. Monoclinic hem'i-par'a-næs-the'si-a, or -par'an-es-the'si-a (hĕm'ĭ-păr'ăn-ĕs-thē'sĭ-a ; -zhĭ-a), n. [NL.] Med. Anæsthesia of the lower half of one side of the body hem'i-par'a-ple'gi-a (-a-plē'jĭ-a), n. [NL.] Med Paralysis of one side of the lower half of the body.

hem'i-plank'ton, n [NL.] Biol. The plankton found in shallow water. Rare. [Hemiplegia.

hem'i-ple'gy (hĕm'ĭ-plē'jĭ), n. hem'i-pod. Var. of HEMIPODE Hem'i-po'di-i (-pō'dĭ-ī), n. pl. [NL.] = TURNICES [mid.

hem'i-pro'te-in. n. Antialbumid.

he-mip'ter (hĕ-mĭp'tĕr), n. Zool. One of the He Hemiptera.

He-mip'ter-oi'de-a (-ō'dē-a), n. pl. [NL See HEMIPTERA; -OID.] Paleon. See PALÆODICTYOPTERA — he-mip'ter-oid, a.

hem'i-ptyx (hĕm'ĭ-tĭks), n [NL.] Zool = hem'i-ra'mi (-rā'mī), n. pl. [NL See HEMIRAMOUS.

hem'i-ramph (hĕm'ĭ-răm(f)), n. [hemi- + Gr ῥάμφος a curved beak.] A halfbeak.

Hem'i-ram-phi'dæ (-răm'fĭ-dē), Hem'i-ram-phi'næ (-răm-fī'nē), Hem'i-ram'phus, n. [NL.] Zool. See HALFBEAK. — hem'i-ram'phine (-fĭn, -fīn; 183), a Hem'i-rham'phus, Hem'i-cham'phi-dæ, etc Vars. of HEMIRHAMPHUS, etc.

hem'i-sect' (hĕm'ĭ-sĕkt'), n. t. [hemi- + L. secare to cut] Anat. To divide along the mesial plane RARE. — hem'i-sec'tion (-sĕk'shŭn). n.

hem'i-spasm, n. Med. Spasm of one side of the body only.

hem'i-spher'al (hĕm'ĭ-sfĕr'ăl), a. Hemispherical. Rare.

hem'i-sphered (-sfērd), a Having a hemisphere or hemispherical form. Rare. [spherule. R

hem'i-sym-met'ri-cal, a. Hemihedral. — hem'i-sym'me-try, n.

hem'i-tax'y. = HEMIATAXIA.

hem'i-ter'a-ta (hĕm'ĭ-tĕr'a-tă), n.pl. [NL.; hemi- + Gr. τέρας, gen. τερατα, monster.] Terat. Individuals marked by hemitery. — hem'i-te-rat'ic (-tē-răt'ĭk), a — hem'i-te-rat'ics, n. pl.

hem'i-te'ri-a (hĕm'ĭ-tē'rĭ-a), hem'i-ter-y (hĕm'ĭ-tĕr-ĭ), n. [NL. hemiteria.] Congenital malformation not amounting to monstrosity. [PENE.

hem'i-ter'pene, n See TER-hem'i-tone, n. [L. hemitonium, Gr. ἡμιτόνιον. See SEMITONE.] a Greek Music. The interval $\frac{256}{243}$, being the difference between a perfect fourth and two "tones." b = SEMITONE.

hem'i-tri'glyph, n. See HEMI-he-mit'ro-pal (hĕ-mĭt'rō-păl), a. = HEMITROPOUS.

hemlock parsley. Any apiaceous plant of the genus Conioselinum, the species of which resemble the true hemlock, but are harmless.
hemlock pitch. The pitch or resin derived from the hemlock spruce, used in pharmacy as a rubefacient. hemlock spruce. Any pinaceous tree of the genus Tsuga, esp. T. canadensis, a handsome forest tree of the eastern United States, having spreading, freely branching limbs. Also, its timber, which is hard and of good quality. The bark is used in tanning. See TSUGA. hem'mer (hĕm'ẽr), n. One that hems; specif.: a An attachment to a sewing machine, for turning under the edge of a piece of fabric, preparatory to stitching it down. b A tool for turning over the edge of sheet metal.
hemo-. Var. of HÆMO-, combining form fr. Gr. αἷμα, blood.
hem'or-rhage (hĕm'ŏ-rāj), n. [F. hémorragie, hémorrhagie, L haemorrhagia, Gr αἱμορραγία; αἷμα blood + ῥηγνύναι to break, burst.] Med. Any discharge of blood from the blood vessels, called primary hemorrhage when occurring at the time of the injury, secondary hemorrhage when some time has elapsed between the injury and the bleeding, arterial hemorrhage when from an artery, venous hemorrhage when from a vein.
hem'or-rhag'ic (-răj'ĭk), a. [Gr. αιμορραγικός.] Pert. or tending to a flux of blood; consisting in, or accompanied by, hemorrhage.—hemorrhagic diathesis, Med., a systemic disorder characterized by a tendency to bleed from the slightest wound. It is due to noncoagulability of the blood.—h. variola, Med., a virulent variola in which hemorrhage occurs from the mucous membranes.
hem'or-rhoid, hæm'or-rhoid (hĕm'ŏ-roid), n.; usually in pl. [F. hémorroides, hémorrhoïdes, L. haemorrhoidae, pl., Gr. αἱμορροΐς, sing., αἱμορροΐδες (sc. φλέβες), pl., veins liable to discharge blood, hemorrhoids, fr. αἱμόρροος flowing with blood; αἷμα blood + ῥεῖν to flow. See RHEUM.] Med. A livid and painful swelling formed by dilatation of a blood vessel at the margin of, or within, the anus, from which blood or mucus is occasionally discharged; (pl.) piles.
hem'or-rhoi'dal, hæm'or-rhoi'dal (-roi'dăl), a. [Cf. F. hémorroïdal, hémorrhoïdal.] a Of or pert. to, or of the nature of, hemorrhoids. b Rectal (in various anatomical terms). hemorrhoidal arteries, Anat., arteries supplying the rectum and anal region. The superior is a continuation of the inferior mesenteric: the middle and inferior are usually branches of the internal iliac and internal pudic respectively. Homer relates how Zeus cast him out of Olympus for taking the part of his mother, Hera, in a quarrel. Another version of his fall states that Hera, ashamed of his lameness, threw him at his birth into the sea There he established his workshop and fashioned, among other wonders, a throne for Hera such that once seated in it she would be bound down and could be released only by himself Ares failed in an effort to compel him to return and release Hera, but Dionysus succeeded in this mission by the genial influence of wine. He is husband of Aphrodite or of Charis, and is usually represented as a vigorous man equipped with hammer and tongs and having one leg shortened to show his lameness.

Like his, her is used in obs. and dial. Eng. to make the possessive of a given noun, as, "Haunted Lucilla her company." Lyly.

Hera.

her, here, pron. 3d pl. possessive, or pronom. adj. [ME. here, hire, AS. heora, hiera, hyra, gen. pl. of hē he. See HE.] Of or belonging to them; their; their own. Obs.

He'ra (hē'rä), He're (hē'rē), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἥρα, Ἥρη.] Gr. Relig. An Olympian goddess, queen of heaven, sister and wife of Zeus, whose power and honors she shared; — identified by the Romans with Juno (which see). Hera has been regarded as a moon, earth, or air goddess, but her characteristic functions reveal merely the goddess of woman's life. Thus she was worshiped as Parthenos, the maid, Teleia, the married goddess, or goddess of the married state, and sometimes as Chera, the widowed. She was also, as goddess of childbirth, called Eileithyia (which see), and as the nourisher of children, Kourotrophos. The most characteristic of the rites in her honor was the sacred marriage (ἱερὸς γάμος) with Zeus, performed as a religious play or pageant. Though worshiped throughout Greece, Hera was esp. prominent in Argos and Samos, and in the Iliad is a particular champion of the Argive forces. In many myths she is represented as jealous of the other consorts of Zeus, and Heracles (Hercules) and other offspring of such unions suffer from her displeasure. The classical worship of Hera had probably absorbed the cult of a primitive cow goddess, whence was derived her Homeric epithet "the ox-eyed." Cf. APPLE OF DISCORD, Io.

Her'a-cle'an (hĕr'a-klē'ăn), Her'a-cle'ian (-klē'yăn, -klē'-ăn), a. [L. Heracleus, fr Gr. Ἡράκλειος, fr. Ἡρακλῆς Hercules.] Pertaining to Heracles, or Hercules.

Her'a-cles, Her'a-kles (hĕr'a-klēz), n. [Gr. Ἡρακλῆς.] Hercules (which see); — the form usually preferred where Greek religion or mythology (rather than Greco-Roman) alone is under consideration.

Her'a-cle'um (hĕr'a-klē'ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἡρακλε.α a kind of plant, fr. Ἡρακλῆς Hercules.] Bot. A large genus of apiaceous plants related to Peucedanum, having wing-margined fruit and large umbels of white flowers. The species are widely distributed in north temperate regions. H. lanatum and H. sphondylium are the cow parsnips Her'a-cli'dæ (-klĭ'dē), n. pl.; sing. Her'a-clid (hĕr'a-klĭd). [Gr. Ἡρακλεῖδαι] Gr. Myth. The descendants of Hercules. The myths relating to them are chiefly accounts of their repeated efforts to obtain the mastery of the Peloponnesus, which Zeus had designed for Hercules, though Hera had succeeded in securing it for Eurystheus. The first and second invasions were headed by Hyllus, Hercules's son, who was slain. Success only attended the fifth invasion, under Oxylus, eighty years after the fall of Troy. These legends are doubtless founded on Dorian conquests of the Peloponnesus. — Her'a-cli'dan (-klĭ'dăn), a.

Her'a-cli-te'an (hĕr'a-klĭ-tē'ăn), a [L. Heracliteus, fr. Gr. Ἡρακλειτειος, fr. Ἡράκλειτος.] Pertaining to the Greek philosopher Heraclitus (about 500 B. C), for his seriousness called the Weeping Philosopher, also, pertaining to his theories — n. A follower of Heraclitus.

Her'a-cli-te'an-ism (-Iz'm), n. The philosophy of Heraclitus, who taught that the principle, or ultimate nature, of all things is ethereal fire, that nature represents the constant flux and flow of this principle or element, and that the transmutations which result cause periodical creation and dissolution of the universe.

her'ald (hĕr'ăld), n. [ME. herald, heraud, OF. heralt, heraut, hiraut, F. héraut, LL. heraldus, haraldus, perh. fr. (assumed) OHG. heriwalto, harwaldo, a (civil) officer who serves the army; hari, heri, army + waltan to manage, govern, G. walten (see HARRY, WIELD); or cf. OHG. harēn, herēn, to call out, cry, akin to Goth. hazjan to praise, AS. herian.] 1. a An officer whose business was to proclaim war or peace, to bear messages to or from rulers or commanders, to make solemn announcements, etc. He was invested with a sacred and inviolable character. b In tourneys, an official who issued and announced challenges, marshaled the combatants, etc.

2. In Great Britain and Ireland, a similar officer charged also with the care of genealogies, of the privileges of noble families, and esp. of armorial bearings. See HERALDS' COLLEGE. Since the Middle Ages the office of herald has become of less importance, and remains only in vestiges. The heralds under the Lyon King-of-Arms are Islay, Rothesay, Marchmont, Albany, Ross, and Snowdown. Those under the Ulster King-of-Arms are Cork and Dublin.

3. Hence, one who proclaims, publishes, or announces; one who conveys news or notification; a messenger, a forerunner; a precursor; a harbinger.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shak.

4. a The red-breasted or other merganser. Local, Scot. b A European noctuid moth (Gonoptera libatrix).

Syn. — See FORERUNNER.

Her-bar'ti-an-ism (hĕr-bar'tĭ-ăn-Iz'm), n. The philosophy of Johann Friedrich Herbart (1776-1841); — chiefly used of the educational system outlined by Herbart and expanded by his disciples. According to him sense perception is a collision of some sort between one reality (the soul) and an external reality. The soul subdues the colling reality by uniting it with its previous experience and harmonizing it through the activity of apperception. This latter process (apperception) plays the chief rôle in his psychology and has been fruitful in pedagogic theory See APPERCEPTION W. T. Harris.

In England, by the Lands Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict., c. 65) hereditaments vest in the personal representative, called for that purpose the real representative.

he-red'i-ta-ry (hĕ-rĕd'ĭ-tă-rĭ), a. [L. hereditarius, fr. hereditas heirship, inheritance, fr. heres heir: cf. F. héréditaire. See HEIR] 1. Descended, or capable of descending, from an ancestor to an heir at law ; received or passing by inheritance, or that must pass by inheritance.

Syn. — Ancestral, patrimonial, inheritable. See INNATE. hereditary ataxia, Med., a hereditary disease, resembling in its symptoms locomotor ataxia, characterized anatomically by sclerosis of the lateral and posterior columns of the spinal cord ; — called also Friedreich's disease.

he-red'i-ty (-tĭ), n. [L. hereditas heirship. cf. F. hérédité.] Biol. Hereditary transmission of the physical and psychical characters of parents to their offspring ; — the name given to the generalization, drawn from the observed facts, that animals and plants closely resemble their progenitors. Heredity has its physical basis in the development of the offspring from one or more living cells derived from the parent or parents. The phenomena of the formation and union of these cells (the germ cells) in sexual reproduction strongly indicate that the chromatin (which see) contained in their nuclei is the real bearer of the hereditary characters, though the influence of other contents of the cells is not excluded. The manifestation of heredity is never quite complete, but is always modified by more or less variation (which see), resulting in differences between individuals, and in the formation of new species. See EVOLUTION, 7 b. In addition to new characters thus appearing spontaneously, other characters (acquired characters) may be acquired by the individual through contact with its environment, as in the greater development of a part by continued use, or its atrophy due to disuse. The inheritance of acquired characters is considered an important factor in evolution by the Neo-Lamarckians, but is not accepted by the Neo-Darwinians (see these terms). Characters may be inherited but remain latent for one or more generations. See MENDEL'S LAW, GALTON'S LAW, WEISMANNISM, PANGENESIS, GERM CELL.

Syn. — See INHERITANCE.

Her'e-ford (hĕr'ĕ-fẽrd), n. One of a breed of beef cattle originating in Herefordshire, England, now extensively raised in the western United States. was under the same obligation as to acceptance if appointed by will Next came the agnates and then the gentiles (members of the same gens with the deceased). Any heir other than a suus heres, whether of an intestate or under a will, was called ex-tra'ne-us he'res (ĕk-strā'nē-ŭs), or outside heir; and the inheritance vested in him only upon a definite acceptance. To a slave who was appointed as a he'res ne'ces-sa'ri-us (nĕs'ĕ-sā'rĭ-ŭs), i. e., one who could not refuse the heirship, the prætor gave the be'ne-fi'ci-um se'pa-ra'ti-o'nis (sĕp'a-rā'shĭ-ō'nĭs), or right of keeping acquisitions made after the testator's death. Formerly, in countries having an established church, heresy was a crime, and consisted in refusal to accept any prescribed article of faith. The canon law names 82 different sorts. In England the writ "De heretico comburendo" was abolished by 29 Car. II. c 9, and various toleration acts have practically abolished civil punishment for heresy.

> Deluded people! that do not consider that the greatest heresy in the world is a wicked life. Tillotson.

2. An opinion held in opposition to the established or commonly received doctrine, and tending to promote division or dissension; — usually said in reproach.

> New opinions
> Divers and dangerous, which are heresies Shak.

3. A characteristic opinion held by a person or a party; a particular body or style of doctrine; a sect.

> After the study of philosophy began in Greece, . . . because every man took what opinion he pleased, each several opinion was called a heresy; which signified no more than a private opinion, without reference to truth or falsehood Hobbes.

her'e-tic (hĕr'ĕ-tĭk), n. [ME. heretike, eretike, F. hérétique, L haereticus, Gr. αἱρετικός able to choose, heretical, fr. αἱρεῖν to take, choose. See HERESY.] One who holds to a heresy; esp., one who, having made a profession of Christian belief, deliberately and pertinaciously upholds a doctrine varying from that of his church, or rejects one prescribed by his church.

Syn. — HERETIC, SCHISMATIC, SECTARIAN (or SECTARY), DISSENTER, NONCONFORMIST. A HERETIC is one who maintains heterodox, or rejects orthodox, opinions or beliefs; a SCHISMATIC is one who (often unjustifiably or contentiously) separates from, or (esp.) provokes division in, a church or communion; a SECTARIAN (frequent as adj.) is an ardent, often narrow-minded or bigoted, adherent of a sect, as, "There is sprung up an heretic, an arch one, Cranmer" (Shak.), "These and twenty such-like questions were proposed, and answered with as much beggarly logic and earnestness as was ever heard to proceed from the mouth of the most pertinacious schismatic" (Walton); "the sectary's . . . precious discoveries of himself and his friends for expressing the inexpressible and defining the undefinable in peculiar forms of their own" (M. Arnold); "I do not like [his] work — immense labor whose results are nullified by a purely sectarian purpose" (Lafcadio Hearn). A DISSENTER is one who separates himself, without the implication conveyed by schismatic, from an established church, specif. from the Church of England; NONCONFORMIST is ordinarily synonymous with dissenter, but sometimes implies (in England) a more qualified dissent; as, "Wesley was not a schismatic, or even, in the doctrinal sense, a dissenter. He desired, not to secede from the Established Church, but to fill it with new life" (Atlantic Monthly); "all of us — Churchmen and dissenters alike" (A. Birrell), "The English and Scotch Nonconformists have a great horror of establishments and endowments for religion" (M. Arnold). See HETERODOX.

2. Fort. A beam or bar armed with iron spikes, and turning on a pivot; — used to block up a passage and, as held by some, as an instrument of punishment for soldiers, who were made to sit astride of it; hence, such punishment.

her'it-a-bil'i-ty (hĕr'ĭt-ă-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. State of being heritable.

her'it-a-ble (hĕr'ĭt-ă-b'l), a. [OF. héritable. See HERITAGE, HEREDITABLE.] 1. Capable of being inherited or of passing by inheritance; inheritable. In the Civil and Scots law heritable is distinguished from movable; and with the exception of feuds, tithes, life rents, or estates for life in lands, mortgage debts, and some other things, corresponds nearly to the English term real, esp. with reference to the rights of the heir and the personal representative. See HEIR.

2. Scots Law. Of or pertaining to heritable property.

3. Capable of inheriting or receiving by inheritance.

heritable bond or security, Scots Law, a form of bond or obligation which carried a yearly profit and was secured upon land, and was treated as heritable It is practically obsolete, being superseded by the heritable securities provided for by the act of 1868, which are simplified in form so as to be essentially like the English and American mortgage of real property, such as the bond and disposition in security, which contains a personal obligation to pay the debt incurred (principal, interest, and penalty), a deed of lands in security, and a power to sell upon notice and advertisement. The statute makes these securities movable in general as regards the succession of the creditor. — h. jurisdictions, Scots Law, certain criminal jurisdictions which formerly descended with the lands to which they were annexed They are now either abolished or obsolete, chiefly by virtue of 20 Geo. II. c. 43 (1746-47) — h. leasehold. See EMPHYTEUSIS. — h. securities See HERITABLE BOND.

her'it-a-ble, n. Usually in pl. A piece of heritable property.

her'it-a-bly (-blĭ), adv. By right or virtue of heirship; by way of inheritance.

her'it-age (hĕr'ĭ-tăj), n [ME. heritage, eritage, OF. heritage, eritage, F. héritage, fr. hériter to inherit, LL. hereditare. See HEREDITABLE.] 1 That which is inherited, or passes from heir to heir; an inheritance; hence, the lot, condition, or status into which one is born; birthright, as, liberty of speech is the heritage of freemen.

2. Law. Specif., the property which descends to the heir, as distinct from that which goes to the executor or administrator. In Scots law, formerly often specif., the rights acquired by descent as heir of line, as distinct. from the conquest. The legal distinction was abolished in 1874.

3 Bib God's chosen people; Israel: the Christian church. Joel iii. 2. 1 Peter v. 3.

4. Process or fact of inheriting; inheritance. Obs.

5 Heirs collectively. Obs & R.

Syn. — HERITAGE, INHERITANCE, PATRIMONY. HERITAGE is poetical or elevated for inheritance, in the sense of that which is inherited; INHERITANCE (see INHERITANCE) alone applies to the act or state of inheriting; as, "I have a goodly heritage" (Ps. xvi. 6); "A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children" (Prov. xiii. 22); to hold by inheritance (not heritage); the inheritance (not heritage) of an estate. PATRIMONY is strictly an inheritance from one's father, but is also used (esp. fig.) in the more general sense of ancestral inheritance; as, "to reave the orphan of his patrimony" (Shak.); "The English race has yet to be explored and their now unknown wealth of hereditary gifts recorded, that those who possess such a patrimony should know of it" (F. Galton) her-maph'ro-dite (hĕr-măf'rō-dīt), n. [L. hermaphroditus, Gr. ἑρμαφρόδιτος, so called from the story of Hermaphroditus: cf. F. hermaphrodite.] 1. Biol. An individual having both male and female reproductive organs. In the higher vertebrates, including man, this is an abnormal and rare condition, and the organs and functions of one or both sexes are nearly always imperfectly developed. Among the fishes it is more common, and is a normal condition in a few forms. Some species of the genus Serranus are said to habitually fertilize their own eggs. Many invertebrates are hermaphroditic, but in a large proportion of them the eggs must be fertilized by the spermatozoa of another individual, either because the sexual products are produced at different times (a condition called successive hermaphroditism) or because of the location and structure of the accessory reproductive organs.

2. Naut. A hermaphrodite brig.

her-maph'ro-dite, a. 1. Of or pert. to hermaphrodites; characterized by hermaphroditism.

Her-maph'ro-di'tus (-dĭ'tŭs), n. [Gr. Ἑρμαφρόδιτος.] Gr. Myth. A son of Hermes and Aphrodite. When bathing he became joined in one body with Salmacis, the nymph of a fountain in Caria.

her'me-neu'tic (hûr'mē-nū'tĭk) } a. [Gr. ἑρμηνευτικός, her'me-neu'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } fr. ἑρμηνεύειν to interpret.] Unfolding the signification; interpretative, as, hermeneutic theology. — her'me-neu'ti-cal-ly, adv.

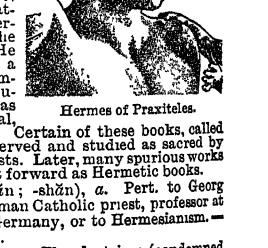
her'me-neu'tics (-tĭks), n. [Gr. ἑρμηνευτική (sc. τέχνη).] The science of interpretation and explanation; esp., that branch of theology which defines the laws whereby the meaning of the Scriptures is to be ascertained; — disting. from exegesis, which is the concrete interpretation according to hermeneutical (general) principles Her'mes (hûr'mēz), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἑρμῆς.] Gr. Relig. An Olympian god, son of Zeus and Maia, — identified by the Romans with Mercury (which see). His chief character was that of herald and messenger of the gods, but he was also prominent as giver of increase to herds and as guardian of boundaries and of roads and their commerce (see HERM). He was further god of science and invention, of eloquence, of cunning, trickery, and theft, of luck and treasure-trove, of youth and gymnastic exercises, while as psychopompos he was conductor of the dead to Hades. Hermes is usually represented as a slightly draped, beardless youth with the talaria, caduceus, and petasus as attributes Cf. ARGUS. — Her'mes of Prax-it'e-les (prăk-sĭt'ē-lēz), a statue in Parian marble by Praxiteles, now at Olympia, where it was excavated from the Heraion in 1877. It represents Hermes nude, supporting the infant Dionysus on his left arm, which rests upon a tree stump. —Her'mes Tris'me-gis'tus (trĭs'mē-jĭs'tŭs) [Gr. Ἑρμῆς τρισμέγιστος, lit., Hermes thrice greatest], was a late name of Hermes, as identified with the Egyptian god Thoth. He was the fabled author of a large number of works embodying Neo-Platonic, Judaic, and cabalistic ideas, as well as magical, astrological, and alchemical doctrines.



Hermes of Praxiteles.

Certain of these books, called Hermetic books, were preserved and studied as sacred by the ancient Egyptian priests. Later, many spurious works on similar topics were put forward as Hermetic books.

her'mit (hûr'mĭt), n. [ME. hermite, ermite, F. hermite, ermite, L. eremita, Gr. ἐρημίτης, fr. ἔρῆμος lonely, solitary. Cf. EREMITE.] 1. A person who retires from society and lives in solitude, esp. from religious motives; recluse; anchoret. 2. A beadsman; one bound to pray for another. Obs. "We rest your hermits." Shak. 3. Any of certain tropical American humming birds, constituting the genus Phaëthornis, which are plainly colored and inhabit dark forests; — sometimes extended to species of allied genera. 4. Cookery. A spiced molasses cooky, often containing chopped raisins and nuts.

Syn. — HERMIT, ANCHORITE, RECLUSE, ASCETIC. HERMIT and ANCHORITE apply to one who retires to a life of solitude, esp. from religious motives; the two words are frequently interchangeable, but anchorite commonly connotes greater austerity than hermit, which is often broadly used in the sense of one who for any reason lives to himself; as, "A knight . . . now forty years a hermit, who had prayed, labored and prayed, and ever laboring had scooped himself in the white rock a chapel and a hall" (Tennyson); "The hermits of reverie are scared by the busy world, and find themselves out of place in action" (Mrs. Humphry Ward); "Why, sirrah, you're an anchorite!—a vile, insensible stock" (Sheridan); "a very blank anchorite repast" (Thackeray). A RECLUSE is one who lives in seclusion, originally for religious reasons, in modern usage more frequently because of love of solitude or aversion to society; as, "A philosophical poem . . . to be entitled the 'Recluse,' as having for its subject the sensations and opinions of a poet living in retirement" (Wordsworth). ASCETIC (see STRICT) adds to the idea of solitary life the implication of extreme rigor or self-mortification; as, "He had to scourge himself up to some of his pastoral duties as relentlessly as a Catholic ascetic" (Mary Wilkins). See MONK, CLOISTER.

her'mit-age (hûr'mĭ-tĭj; 48), n. [ME. hermitage, ermitage, F. hermitage, ermitage. See HERMIT.] 1. The habitation of a hermit; a secluded residence.

Icel. hegri, Dan. heire, Sw. häger, and also D. reiger heron, G. reiher, AS. hrāgra. Cf. EGRET.] Any of certain schizognathous altricial wading birds which constitute the family Ardeidæ. The herons have a long neck and legs, a long tapering bill with a sharp point and sharp cutting edges, large wings, and soft plumage. They have the inner edge of the claw of the middle toe pectinate. Some species exhibit dichromatism, and many develop special plumes in the breeding season. The herons chiefly frequent the vicinity of water and feed mostly on aquatic animals, which they capture by quick thrusts of the sharp bill. They usually nest in trees (though the bitterns are exceptions to this rule), often in communities called heronries. The different species vary much in size, but none are as large as some of the cranes (see CRANE), with which they are often popularly confused. The common heron (Ardea cinerea) of Europe, and the great blue heron (A. herodias) and little blue heron (Florida cærulea) of America, are well-known and widely distributed species. The first mentioned was formerly much hunted with falcons. Cf EGRET.

her'ring (hĕr'ĭng), n. [ME. hering, AS. hǽring; akin to D. haring, G. haring, hering, OHG. hāring, hering.] A small isospondylous fish (Clupea harengus) which is extraordinarily abundant in the temperate and colder parts of the North Atlantic, swimming in schools which sometimes contain hundreds of millions of individuals. They feed chiefly on small crustaceans and approach the coasts for spawning, depositing their eggs (which adhere to stones or other objects on the bottom) in shallow water. The herring is one of the most important of food fishes. It is preserved by smoking, salting, or canning. On the American coast the young are extensively canned and sold as sardines. A closely allied species, the California herring (C. pallasii), replaces it in the North Pacific. The name herring is extended, usually with some qualifying word (cf. BRANCH HERRING, GLUT HERRING), to many members of the family Clupeidæ (which see), of which the common herring is the type, and is used as a general name for the members of that family. It is also extended to some fishes of other families more or less similar to the true herring. Cf. LAKE HERRING, RAINBOW HERRING, FRESH-WATER HERRING.

Common Herring (Clupea harengus). (½)

Herringbone Strutting.

herring gull. A common and widely distributed gull (Larus argentatus) of Europe and North America, having, when adult, the plumage largely white, with a light blue-gray mantle, and black tips (marked with white) to the wings. The young are dark-colored. It is the common large gull on the Atlantic coast of North America, and is also numerous in the interior, breeding from Maine and the Great Lakes northward.

her'ring-kale' (hĕr'ĭng-kāl'), n. A common parrot fish (Olisthops cyanomelas) of the Australian coasts.

Herrn'hut-er (hĕrn'ho͝ot-ẽr), n. Eccl. Hist. One of the Moravians; — so called from the settlement of Herrnhut made, about 1722, by the Moravians at the invitation of Nicholas Lewis, Count of Zinzendorf, upon his estate in the circle of Bautzen.

hers (hûrz), pron. The form of the possessive her used absolutely, that is, without the governing noun following. "What his fortune wanted, hers could mend." Dryden. Like yours and theirs, hers is the form used after of; as, a gift of hers (see POSSESSIVE, a.). It was formerly used also as the first of two possessives before a noun; as, hers and my brother, — now, her brother and mine. See HERN.

Her-schel'i-an (hûr-shĕl'ĭ-ăn), a. Of or relating to Sir William Herschel, English astronomer (1738-1822). — n. A Herschelian telescope. See TELESCOPE.

herse (hûrs), n. [F. herse harrow, portcullis. See HEARSE.] 1. = HARROW, implement, 1, 2 a & c. Obs. or Hist. 2. Mil. Antiq. A battle formation somewhat similar to the Greek phalanx.

3. A frame on which skins are dried, as for parchment. 4. Obs. var. or ref. sp. of HEARSE.

Her'se (hûr'sē), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἕρση.] Gr. Myth. One of the three daughters of Cecrops to whom Athena gave a box containing Erichthonius. Two of them, Herse and Aglauros, yielding to curiosity, opened the box, found a snake within, and threw themselves from the Acropolis.

her-self' (hĕr-sĕlf'), pron. An emphasized form of the pronoun for the third person sing. feminine. Its uses are: 1. For emphasis: a As a simple objective; as, a gift intended for herself. b In apposition with she or with a nominative or objective noun, as, she herself said it; armies threatened Rome herself. c As subject nominative; as, herself would bear the blame. Archaic. d As predicate nominative; as, she came herself; — often with the force of by herself, alone; as, she did it herself.

☞ Herself is sometimes represented as used by Welsh or Gaelic speakers in the same manner as her. See HER, 1.

2. Specif., esp. after be, become, etc.: Her normal, proper, or true self, hence, her right or sane mind, as, she was demented, but is now herself again; she has come to herself.

3. As a reflexive; as, she blames herself.

☞ Herself is often divided, as in "her own self," being treated as possessive and noun.

Her'shef (hĕr'shĕf), n. [Prob. Egypt. hershef bravery.] Egypt. Relig. The tutelary deity of Heracleopolis, a local form of Osiris. Hershef was known to the Greeks as Arsaphes ['Αρσαφῆς], and was identified by them with Heracles.

Hertz'i-an (hĕrt'sĭ-ăn), a. Of or pert. to the German physicist Heinrich Hertz.

Hertzian telegraphy, telegraphy by means of the Hertzian waves; wireless telegraphy. — H. waves, electric waves; — so called because Hertz was the first to investigate them systematically. His apparatus consisted essentially in an oscillator for producing the waves, and a resonator for detecting them (see HERTZ RADIATOR, OSCILLATOR, RESONATOR). The waves were found to have the same velocity as light, and to undergo reflection, refraction, and polarization.

Hertz radiator (hĕrts). Elec. The elementary form of oscillator used by Hertz. It consisted of a pair of metallic plates or balls each attached to a short rod ending in a knob connected to the secondary circuit of an induction coil, the rods being placed with the knobs a short distance apart. See OSCILLATOR.

her'y (hĕr'ĭ), v. t. [AS. herian.] To glorify; extol; praise. Obs. or Archaic.

Her'ze-go-vin'i-an (hĕr'tsĕ-gō-vĭn'ĭ-ăn), n. A native of Herzegovina, the inhabitants of which are a Slavic-speaking people, noted for their tall stature. They are classed by Deniker as of the Adriatic race (which see).

He'si-od'ic (hē'sĭ-ŏd'ĭk), a. [From Gr. Ἡσίοδος Hesiod.] Of or pertaining to the Greek poet Hesiod, or resembling his works. The Hesiodic poems comprise (1) the "Works and Days," collections of practical and religious maxims, a calendar of lucky and unlucky days, etc.; (2) the "Theogony," giving the origin of the universe and the dynasties of the gods; and (3) the "Shield of Heracles," a short epic.

He-si'o-ne (hē-sī'ō-nē), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἡσιόνη.] 1. Gr. Myth. A daughter of Laomedon, king of Troy. He was compelled by Poseidon to offer her to a sea monster sent by the god to scourge the land for the king's refusal to repay Poseidon for help in building the walls. Hesione was saved by Heracles, who slew the monster. Cf. ANDROMEDA. 2. Zoöl. A genus of marine polychæte worms of the order Errantia, having a relatively short body and a long protrusible pharynx without teeth. It is the type of a family, He'si-on'i-dæ (hē'sĭ-ŏn'ĭ-dē).

hes'i-tan-cy (-tăn-sĭ) }

Hesitation, esp as a quality or trait of character; indecision.

Syn. — See HESITATION.

hes'i-tant (-tănt), a. [L. haesitans, p. pr. of haesitare. See HESITATE.] Not prompt in deciding or acting; hesitating; unready. — hes'i-tant-ly, adv.

hes'i-tate (hĕz'ĭ-tāt; 277), v. i.; HES'I-TAT'ED (-tāt'ĕd); HES'I-TAT'ING (-tāt'ĭng). [L. haesitare, intens. fr. haerere to hesitate, stick fast; to hang or hold fast. Cf. ADHERE.] 1. To stop or pause respecting decision or action; to be in uncertainty as to a determination; as, he hesitated whether to accept or not; to hesitate in forming a judgment. 2. To stammer; to falter in speaking.

Syn. — HESITATE, FALTER, DEMUR agree in implying irresolution or uncertainty. HESITATE is the general term; FALTER (frequently used of a hesitating brokenness of speech) suggests wavering in purpose or action; to DEMUR, in earlier usage to pause or suspend judgment in uncertainty, has now acquired the more positive sense of taking exception to something; as, "I have for many months hesitated about the propriety of allowing . . . any part of my narrative to come before the public eye" (De Quincey); "He who hesitates is lost" (Proverb); "with a voice that did not falter though the heart was moved" (Wordsworth); "neither to change, nor falter, nor repent" (Shelley); "Notwithstanding he hoped that matters would have been long since brought to an issue, the fair one still demurs" (Spectator); "When you say that this passage or that demur; and more, I wholly disagree" (Tennyson). See HESITATION, FLUCTUATE, DEFER, LINGER, TRIFLE.

hes'i-tate (hĕz'ĭ-tāt; 277), v. t. To utter with hesitation, or to intimate by a reluctant manner.

hes'i-ta'tion (-tā'shŭn), n. [L. haesitatio: cf. F. hésitation.] 1. Act or fact of hesitating; suspension of opinion or action; doubt; vacillation. 2. A faltering in speech; stammering.

Hesitation ranges from the slightest difficulty experienced in producing an elementary sound to actual stammering. Indeed, it is not always easy to distinguish between the hesitation of the mind over the choice of words and that of the vocal organs over the articulation of sounds. Guy Carleton Lee.

Syn. — HESITATION, HESITANCY are often indistinguishable. But HESITATION more commonly applies to the action, HESITANCY to the condition or quality, of hesitating; as, to accept without hesitation, to feel great hesitancy about accepting. See HESITATE.

hes'i-ta-tive (hĕz'ĭ-tā-tĭv), a. Showing, or characterized by, hesitation. — hes/i-ta-tive-ly, adv.

[He said] in his mild, hesitative way. R. D. Blackmore.

Hes'per-id (hĕs'pẽr-ĭd), n. 1. One of the Hesperides. 2. [l. c.] Zoöl. One of the Hesperiidæ. — hes'per-id, a.

Hes-per'i-des (hĕs-pẽr'ĭ-dēz), n. pl. [L., fr. Gr. Ἑσπερίδες.] Class. Myth. a The nymphs who guarded with the aid of a dragon the garden in which grew the golden apples which Gæa had given as a wedding present to Hera. To get some of these apples was one of the labors of Hercules. The nymphs were also called Atlantides. Their names and number vary with different writers. Apollonius gives them as Ægle, Hespera, and Erytheis; Apollodorus as Ægle, Erythea, Hestia, and Arethusa. b The garden producing the golden apple, located in the extreme West, hence in Africa, the Fortunate Isles, etc.

hes-per'i-din (-dĭn), n. [See HESPERIDIUM.] Chem. A white crystalline glucoside, $C_{22}H_{26}O_{12}$, found in ripe and unripe fruit (as the orange). On decomposition it yields hesperetin and glucose.

hes'per-id'i-um (hĕs'pẽr-ĭd'ĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -IDIA (-ă). [NL. So called in allusion to the golden apples of the Hesperides. See HESPERIDES.] Bot. A syncarpous, polycarpellary, many-celled berry, with a spongy exocarp. It is the characteristic fruit of the orange (Citrus) and its relatives.

Hes'per-i'i-dæ (-ĭ'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. The family consisting of the skipper butterflies.

Hes'per-is (hĕs'pẽr-ĭs), n. [L., damewort, Gr. ἑσπερίς, prop. fem. of ἑσπέριος pertaining to evening. See HESPERIAN.] Bot. A genus of biennial or perennial brassicaceous herbs of Europe and Asia, having large purple and white racemose flowers with elongated erect sepals and bilobed stigma. H. matronalis is the damewort, or rocket.

Hes'per-or'nis (-ôr'nĭs), n. [NL.; Gr. ἕσπερος western + ὄρνις, -ιθος, a bird.] Paleon. A genus of remarkable swimming birds from the Cretaceous of Kansas, having teeth in each jaw implanted in a long groove. The wings were very rudimentary, the sternum keelless, and the vertebræ had saddle-shaped articulations. The birds somewhat resembled the loons in form. H. regalis, the best-known species, was over five feet long. With a few presumably related Cretaceous forms known from fragmentary remains, they constitute the order or superorder Odontolcæ.

Hes'per-us (hĕs'pẽr-ŭs), n. [L. See HESPER.] The evening star; Hesper.

Hes'sian (hĕsh'ăn), a. Of or pert. to Hesse, in Germany, or the Hessians. — Hessian bit, a kind of jointed bit for a bridle. — H. boots, boots of a kind worn in England, early in the 19th century, tasseled in front. — H crucible, a cheap, brittle, and fragile, but very refractory crucible, composed of the finest fire clay and sand, and commonly used for a single heating. It is used in assaying, etc. — H. fly, a small dipterous fly or midge (Mayetiola destructor) which is very destructive to wheat in America. Its larvæ live between the base of the lower leaves and the stalk and suck the juices of the plant. In the pupa stage they are small brown objects resembling flaxseeds. Two broods het'er-al'o-cha (-ăl'ō-kä), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. ἄλοχος spouse.] Zool. The genus consisting of the hutia. het'er-an'drous (-ăn'drŭs), a. [hetero- + -androus.] Bot. Having the stamens or anthers of different length or form.

Het'er-an'ther-a (-thĕr-ä), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. ἀνθηρός flowery.] Bot. A small genus of chiefly American pontederiaceous plants. They are small aquatic or bog herbs having small blue or white flowers H. reniformis is the mud plantain. het'er-arch'y (hĕt'ĕr-ăr'kĭ), n. [hetero- + -archy.] Government by an alien. Obs.
het'er-ax'i-al, a. [hetero- + axial.] Zool. Having three unequal axes perpendicular to each other, as in animals having biradial or bilateral symmetry.
het'er-e'cious. Var. of HETEROECIOUS. he-ter'ic (hē-tĕr'ĭk), a. [Gr. ἕτερος other, different.] Designating, or pert. to, nonphonetic spelling. A. J. Ellis — he-ter'i-cal-ly, adv. — he-ter'i-cism (-ĭ-sĭz'm), n. — he-ter'i-cist (-sĭst), n. het'er-ism (hĕt'ĕr-ĭz'm), n. Biol. Variation. het'er-ize, v. t. [Gr. ἕτερος other, different.] To transform. Rare. — het'er-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn) ; -ĭ-zā'shŭn). Rare.
het'er-o-car'pi-an (-ō-kär'pĭ-ăn), a. Bot. Heterocarpous. het'er-o-cel'lu-lar, a. [hetero- + cellular.] Biol. Composed of more than one kind of cells.
het'er-o-cero' (hĕt'ĕr-ō-sûr'kō), a. Zoöl. Heterocercal. — n. A heterocercal fish.
het'er-o-cer-cal'i-ty (-sĕr-kăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Zool. Heterocercy.
Het'er-o-cer'ci (-sûr'sĭ), n. pl. [NL. See HETEROCERCY.] Paleon. An order of extinct ganoid fishes resembling the Chondrostei (in which they are sometimes included) in skeletal structure, and the Lepidosteï in external features. It includes the Palæoniscidæ and Platysomidæ. het'er-o-chro'ma-tism (-krō'mä-tĭz'm), n. Bot. Variability in the marking of flowers in the same species. — het'er-o-chromat'ic (-krō-măt'ĭk), a. — het'er-o-chro-mis'tic (-krō-mĭs'tĭk), het'er-och'ro-nous (-ŏk'rō-nŭs), a. Biol Heterochronic. het'er-o-chro'sis (-krō'sĭs), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. χρώσις coloring.] Zool. Abnormal coloration. het'er-o-cline' (hĕt'ĕr-ō-klīn'), -oc'li-nous (-ŏk'lĭ-nŭs ; -ō-klī'-nŭs), a. [hetero- + Gr. κλίνη bed.] Bot. Heterocephalous het'er-oc'li-tal (hĕt'ĕr-ŏk'lĭ-tăl), a. Heteroclite. Obs. het'er-o-clit'ic (-ō-klĭt'ĭk), -clit'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. Heteroclite. het'er-oc'li-tous (-ŏk'lĭ-tŭs), a. Heteroclite. Obs.
Het'er-o-cœ'la (-ō-sē'lä), n. pl. [NL. See HETERO-; -COELE.] Zool. An order of calcareous sponges in which the endoderm is partly of flattened cells, the collared cells being restricted to flagellate canals or chambers.
het'er-o-cœ'lous (-lŭs), a. Zoöl. a Designating vertebræ having saddle-shaped articular surfaces, as often in birds. b Of or pert. to the Heterocœla.
het'er-o-cy'cle (hĕt'ĕr-ō-sī'k'l), n. A heterocyclic compound.
het'er-o-dac'tyl (hĕt'ĕr-ō-dăk'tĭl), a. Zool. Heterodactylous. — n. One of the Heterodactylæ.
Het'er-o-dac'ty-læ (-dăk'tĭ-lē), n. pl. [NL.] Zool. A group of birds consisting of the trogons.
Het'er-o-don (hĕt'ĕr-ō-dŏn), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. ὀδούς, ὀδόντος, tooth.] See HOGNOSE SNAKE het'er-o-dont, n. Zool. An animal with heterodont dentition. het'er-o-dont-ism (hĕt'ĕr-ō-dŏnt-ĭz'm), n. Zool. See -ISM. het'er-o-dox, n. A heterodox opinion or person. Obs. het'er-o-dox'al, het'er-o-dox'i-cal, a. Heterodox. Obs.
het'er-œ-cis'mal (hĕt'ĕr-ē-sĭz'măl), a. Bot. Heterœcious. het'er-o-ĕ'py (-ō-ĕ'pĭ), n. [hetero- + Gr. ἔπος word; cf. ORTHOEPY.] Pronunciation differing from a standard. — het'er-o-ĕp'ic (-ō-ĕp'ĭk), a. het'er-o-gam'ic (-ō-găm'ĭk), a. = HETEROGAMOUS. het'er-o-gan'gli-ate, a. [hetero- + ganglion.] Zool. Having the nerve ganglia more or less widely separated and unsymmetrically situated, as in most mollusks. [neous. Obs.] het'er-o-gene', a. Heterogeneous. het'er-o-ge'ne-al (hĕt'ĕr-ō-jē'-nē-ăl), a. Heterogeneous. Rare.
het'er-o-ge'ne-an, a. Heterogeneous. Obs.
het'er-og'e-nist (hĕt'ĕr-ŏj'ē-nĭst), n. Abiogenist. [NEOUS.] het'er-og'e-nous. † HETEROGE-het'er-o-glob'u-lose (hĕt'ĕr-ō-glŏb'ū-lōs), n. [hetero- + globulose.] See HETEROPROTEOSE. het'er-o-gone' (hĕt'ĕr-ō-gōn'), a. Bot. Heterogonous. het'er-og'o-nism (-ŏg'ō-nĭz'm), n. Bot. Heterogony.

three kinds by individuals of the same species, as in Lythrum and Pontederia, due to trimorphism of the androecium and gynœcium.

het'er-og'o-ny (hĕt'ĕr-ŏg'ō-nĭ), n. [hetero- + -gony.] 1. Bot. State of having two or more kinds of perfect flowers, varying in relative length of androecium and gynœcium; — opposed to homogony. 2. Biol. Alternation of generations; esp., alternation of a dœcious and hermaphroditic generation.

Heterogony. Three flowers of Lythrum salicaria in section, showing varying length of Stamens and Pistil: 1 Long-styled; 2 Mid-styled; 3 Short-styled. The arrows indicate the proper course of the pollen.

het'er-o-graph'ic (-ō-grăf'ĭk) } a. Perhet'er-o-graph'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } taining to, or characterized by, heterography.

het'er-og'ra-phy (-ŏg'ra-fĭ), n. [hetero- + -graphy.] a Spelling differing from standard current usage. b Spelling in which the same letters represent different sounds in different words or syllables, as in current English orthography; e. g., g in get and in ginger.

het'er-og'y-nous (-ŏj'ĭ-nŭs), a. [hetero- + -gynous.] Zoöl. Having females of more than one kind, as bees and ants.

het'er-o-ki-ne'sis (hĕt'ĕr-ō-kĭ-nē'sĭs; -kī-nē'sĭs), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. κινησις motion.] Biol. Qualitative nuclear division; a mode of mitosis assumed to separate chromatin elements of different quality; — opposed to homœokinesis.

het'er-o-la'li-a (-lā'lĭ-ă), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. λαλιά talk.] Med. A disorder of speech in which words other than those intended are spoken.

het'er-o-lec'i-thal (-lĕs'ĭ-thăl), a. [hetero- + Gr. λέκιθος yolk of an egg.] Biol. Having the yolk unequally distributed; — opposed to homolecithal.

het'er-ol'o-gous (hĕt'ĕr-ŏl'ō-gŭs), a. [hetero- + Gr. λόγος proportion.] Characterized by heterology; consisting of different elements, or of like elements in different proportions; different; — opposed to homologous.

heterologous series, Chem., a series of related derivatives not homologous, as the series ethane, ethyl alcohol, aldehyde, acetic acid; — so called by Gerhardt, in distinction from homologous series. — h. stimulus. Physiol. See STIMULUS. — h. tumor or tumour, Med., a tumor differing in structure from the normal tissues of the body.

het'er-ol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [hetero- + -logy.] Biol. The lack of correspondence between parts, owing to their being composed of different elements, or to their having a different origin; — opposed to homology.

Het'er-om'er-a (hĕt'ĕr-ŏm'ĕr-ă), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. μέρος part.] Zoöl. A division of Coleoptera having five joints in the tarsi of the fore and middle legs and four in those of the hind legs. It includes the blister, oil, and darkling beetles. — het'er-om'er-an (-ăn), a. & n.

het'er-om'er-ous (-ŭs), a. [See HETEROMERA.] 1. Chem. & Cryst. Unrelated in chemical composition; — said of homœomorphous substances.

2. Bot. a Having one or more whorls the number of whose members differs from that of the remaining whorls; — said of a flower, and opposed to isomerous. b In lichenology, having a thallus with stratified tissue, the algal cells forming a gonidial layer; — opposed to homœomerous.

3. Zoöl. Of or pertaining to, or resembling, the Heteromera or Heteromeri.

het'er-o-met'a-bol'ic (hĕt'ĕr-ō-mĕt'ă-bŏl'ĭk), a. [hetero- + metabolic.] Zoöl. Having a partial or incomplete metamorphosis; of or pert. to a group, Het'er-o-me-tab'o-la (-mē-tăb'ō-lă), consisting of the insects (Hemiptera, Orthoptera, Pseudoneuroptera, etc.) having this character.

Het'er-om'i-ta (-ŏm'ĭ-tă), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. μιτος thread.] Zoöl. A large genus of flagellate infusorians having an anterior flagellum used in progression and a ventral one used as an anchor or trailed behind.

het'er-o-mor'phic (hĕt'ĕr-ō-môr'fĭk), a. [hetero- + -morphic.] Deviating from the normal or usual form; exhibiting diversity of form; specif.: a Zoöl. Having different forms at different stages (as insects which undergo a complete metamorphosis) or in different individuals of the same colony, as in most hydroids. b Bot. Heteromorphous.

het'er-o-mor'phism (-fĭz'm), n. a State or quality of being heteromorphic. b Bot. Heterogony. c Chem. & Cryst. Dissimilarity in crystal form shown by compounds of similar composition; — opposed to isomorphism.

het'er-o-mor'pho-sis (-môr'fō-sĭs), n.; pl. -SES (-sēz). [NL.; heteromorphous + -osis.] Biol. The production by an organism of a part or organ in an abnormal position, esp. in place of some part that has been lost.

het'er-o-mor'phous (-fŭs), a. 1. Heteromorphic.

2. Bot. a Of irregular or unusual structure; of variable shape, as the leaves of Nepenthes. b = HETEROGONOUS.

Het'er-o-my'i-dæ (-mĭ'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. μῦς mouse + -idæ.] Zoöl. An American family of leaping mouse + -idæ.] Zoöl. An American family of leaping two diversiform flagella, as in most of the Dinoflagellata.

Het'er-o-me'les (-mē'lēz), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. μῆλον apple.] Bot. The monotypic genus of malaceous shrubs constituted by H. arbutifolia, the toyon.

Het'er-o-me'ri (-mē'rī), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. μηρός thigh.] Zoöl. A group of clamatorial birds having the femoral the chief artery of the leg. It consists of the families Cotingidæ and Pipridæ.

het'er-o-me-tab'o-lous (-mē-tăb'ō-lŭs), a. Heterometabolic Het'er-o-mor'pha (-môr'fă), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. μορφή form.] = HOLOMETABOLA.

Het'er-o-mor'phæ (-fē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. = OPISTHOCOMI.

het'er-o-mor'phite (-fīt), n [See HETEROMORPHIC.] Min. A sulphide of lead and antimony, usually regarded as a variety of jamesonite.

het'er-o-mor'phy (hĕt'ĕr-ō-môr'fĭ), n Heteromorphism.

Het'er-o-my-a'ri-a (-mĭ-ā'rĭ-ă), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. μῦς a muscle.] Zoöl. A division of bivalve molluska in which the anterior adductor muscle is very small. The ordinary mussels (Mytilidæ) are examples.—het'er-o-my-a'ri-an (-ăn), a.

het'er-o-ne're-id (-nē'rē-ĭd), a. Zoöl. Pert. to, or of the character of, a heteronereis — n A heteronereis.

het'er-o-nym'ic (-nĭm'ĭk), a. Of different name. Rare.

het'er-on'y-mous-ly, adv. of HETERONYMOUS. See -LY.

het'er-o-ou'si-a (hĕt'ĕr-ō-ōō'sĭ-ă; -ou'sĭ-ă), n. Heteroousian doctrine.

het'er-o-ou'si-ast (-ăst), n. A heteroousian.

het'er-o-ou'si-ous (-ŭs), a. Heteroousian.

het'er-o-pet'al-ous, a. [hetero- + petalous] Bot. Having dissimilar petals.

Het'er-oph'a-gi (hĕt'ĕr-ŏf'ă-jĭ), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. φαγειν to eat] Zoöl. The altrices.

het'er-oph'a-gous (-gŭs), a. [hetero- + -phagous.] a Zoöl. Altricial. b Bot. Heterœcious.

het'er-o-pho'ni-a (hĕt'ĕr-ō-fō'nĭ-ă), het'er-oph'o-ny (-ŏf'ō-nĭ), n. [NL. heterophonia See HETERO-; -PHONY.] Med. An abnormal state of the voice.

het'er-oph-thal'mi-a (-ŏf-thăl'mĭ-ă), het'er-oph-thal'mus (-mŭs), het'er-oph-thal'mos (-mŏs), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. ὀφθαλμός eye.] Difference of the two eyes in color, size, aperture of the lids, or the like.

het'er-o-plasm (hĕt'ĕr-ō-plăz'm), n. [hetero- + -plasm.] Tissue formed where it does not normally occur het'er-o-po'lar, a. [hetero- + polar.] Of, pert to, or having unlike poles

het'er-op'tics (-tĭks), n. [hetero- + optics.] False optics.

het'er-o-rhi'zal (-ō-rī'zăl), a. [hetero- + rhizo- + -al.] Bot. Having roots apparently proceeding from no determinate points, as many cryptogams Obs.

het'er-o'sis (-ō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr ἑτέρωσις alteration, ἕτερος other.] Rhet. Use of one grammatical form for another.

het'er-o-so'ma-ti (-ō-sō'mă-tĭ), or -so'mi (-sō'mĭ), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. Heterosomata. — het'er-o-some' (hĕt'ĕr-ō-sōm'), n. — het'er-o-so'mous (-sō'mŭs), a.

het'er-o-so-ter'ic (-sō-tĕr'ĭk), a. [hetero- + Gr. σωτηρία salvation.] Relating to salvation by another Oxf. E. D.

Het'er-o-spo're-æ (-spō'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A primary division of the Pteridophyta employed by some authors, including the Lycopodiaceæ and Equisetaceæ, which produce two kinds of asexual spores.

het'er-o-spor'ic (-spŏr'ĭk), a. [hetero- + spore.] Bot. Heterosporous.

het'er-o-stem'o-nous, a. [hetero- + -stemonous.] Bot. Having dissimilar stamens. Rare.

Het'er-os'tra-ca (-ŏs'trȧ-kȧ), Het'er-os'tra-ci (-sĭ), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. ὄστρακον shell of a testacean.] Paleon. An order of ostracophores having the dermal armor in three layers, and the orbits widely separated and lateral Pterygotus and Drepanaspis are examples.

het'er-o-sty'lism (-ō-stĭ'lĭz'm), het'er-o-sty'ly (hĕt'ĕr-ō-stĭ'lĭ), n. Bot. Heterogony.

het'er-o-sty'lous (-lŭs), a. Bot. Heterostyled het'er-o-syl-lab'ic, a. [hetero- + syllabic] Phon. Having one or more of the last elements uttered with a fresh expiration of breath; — said of a sound group.

het'er-o-tac'tous (hĕt'ĕr-ō-tăk'tŭs), a. Heterotaxic het'er-o-tax'y (hĕt'ĕr-ō-tăk'sĭ), n [hetero- + Gr. τάξις an arrangement.] Heterotaxis.

Het'er-o'tis (-ō'tĭs), n. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. οὖς, ὠτός, ear.] Zoöl. A genus of African freshwater fishes of the family Osteoglossidæ, having a peculiar accessory breathing organ borne on the fourth branchial arch. The young bear external gills.

het'er-o-tom'ic (-ō-tŏm'ĭk), het'er-ot'o-mous (-ŏt'ō-mŭs), a. [hetero- + Gr. -τομος cut.] Bot. Having the segments of the calyx or of the corolla unequal or dissimilar. Rare het'er-o-to'pi-a (-tō'pĭ-ă). Var. of HETEROTOPY

Het'er-op'o-da (hĕt'ĕr-ŏp'ō-dȧ), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + -poda.] Zoöl. An order or other category of streptoneurous gastropods which are pelagic in habits and are structurally modified for this mode of life. They swim at the surface with the ventral side up, and the foot, or a part of it, forms a median fin. The body and the shell (when present) are transparent. There are but few genera, of which Pterotrachæa, Carinaria, and Atlanta are the best-known. — het'er-o-pod' (hĕt'ĕr-ō-pŏd'), a. & n. — het'er-op'o-dous (-ŏp'ō-dŭs), a.

e Eyes; p Proboscis; t Tentacles, x Esophagus, g Gills; c Shell; l Liver; f Foot; s Sucker of Foot.

het'er-o-pro'te-ose (hĕt'ĕr-ō-prō'tē-ōs), n. [hetero- + proteose.] Physiol. Chem. One of a class of primary cleavage products formed esp. in the digestion of proteids with gastric juice. See PROTEOSE. Heteroproteoses are readily soluble in salt solution, somewhat soluble in hot water, but insoluble in cold water. The members are called het'er-o-al'bu-mose, het'er-o-glob'u-lose, het'er-o-ca'se-ose, etc., according to the kind of proteid from which they are derived.

het'er-o-psy'cho-log'i-cal (-sī'kō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. [hetero- + psychological.] Pertaining to mental facts or categories other than those of conscience; — used in the phrase heteropsychological ethics by James Martineau to distinguish ethical theories based on such categories from idiopsychological ethics, or such as are based upon conscience.

Het'er-op'ter-a (hĕt'ĕr-ŏp'tĕr-ă), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. πτερόν a wing.] Zoöl. One of the two chief suborders of the Hemiptera. It contains those insects to which the term bug is most properly applied, the bedbug, squash bug, and chinch bug being familiar examples. They are generally of more or less flattened form with a proboscis adapted for piercing and sucking. The wings (which are present in the adult of most forms) have a characteristic structure, and usually serve to distinguish readily the members of the group. The anterior pair have the basal part thickened and coriaceous, and the distal part membranous; the posterior pair are wholly membranous. Many of the species have strong and characteristic odors. The group is a very large and varied one. Some are carnivorous; but most of them live on the juices of plants, and do great damage to crops and fruits. — het'er-op'ter-an (-ăn), a. & n. — het'er-op'ter-ous (-ŭs), a.

het'er-os'ci-an (-ŏsh'ĭ-ăn), n. [Gr. ἑτερόσκιος; ἕτερος other + σκιά shadow: cf. F. hétéroscien.] One who lives north (or south) of the tropics, in his relation to one who lives south (or north) of the tropics; — so called because at noon their shadows fall in opposite directions (the one northward, the other southward).

Het'er-o-so'ma-ta (hĕt'ĕr-ō-sō'mă-tȧ), n. pl. [NL.; hetero- + Gr. σῶμα, σώματος, body] Zoöl. A group of fishes consisting of the flatfishes (see FLATFISH); — so named from their unsymmetrical form. — het'er-o-som'a-tous (-sŏm'ă-tŭs, -sō'mă-tŭs), a het'er-os'po-rous (-ŏs'pō-rŭs, -ŏ-spō'rŭs), a. [hetero- + sporous.] Bot. a Bearing asexual spores of more than one kind. b Specif.: Producing microspores and megaspores, as pteridophytes of the division Heterosporeæ and all spermatophytes or seed plants; — opposed to homosporous. — het'er-os'po-ry (hĕt'ĕr-ŏs'pō-rĭ), n.

het'er-o-stat'ic (-ō-stăt'ĭk), a. [hetero- + static.] Elec. Designating or pertaining to a method of electrostatic measurement in which one potential is measured by means of a different potential.

het'er-o-stroph'ic (-strŏf'ĭk), a. 1. Anc. Pros. Consisting of strophes differing in metrical form.

2. Zoöl. Relating to, or marked by, heterostrophy.

het'er-os'tro-phy (-ŏs'trō-fĭ), n. [hetero- + Gr. στροφή a turning.] Zoöl. State of being coiled in a direction opposite to the usual one. — het'er-os'tro-phous (-ŏs'trō-fŭs), a.

het'er-o-styled' (hĕt'ĕr-ō-stīld'), a. [hetero- + style + -ed.] Bot. Having styles of two or more distinct forms or of different lengths; heterogonous.

het'er-o-tac'tic (-tăk'tĭk), a. Characterized by, or exhibiting, heterotaxis, specif., Bot., having more than one system or type in the same inflorescence.

het'er-o-tax'is (-tăk'sĭs), n. Also het'er-o-tax'i-a (-tăk'sĭ-ă). [NL.; hetero- + Gr. τάξις an arrangement.] Abnormal arrangement, as of organs or parts of the body, geological strata, etc. — het'er-o-tax'ic (-sĭk), a.

het'er-o-tel'ic (-tĕl'ĭk), a. [hetero- + telic.] Existing for the sake of another; having an extraneous end or purpose; — contrasted with autotelic.

Het'er-ot'o-ma (hĕt'ĕr-ŏt'ō-mȧ), n. [NL. See HETERO-; -TOMY.] Bot. A small genus of Mexican campanulaceous herbs having racemose purple flowers with a bilabiate calyx and tubular corolla bearing a basal spur. H. lobeloides is the bird plant.

Het'er-og'y-na (-ŏj'ĭ-nȧ), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. = FORMICOIDEA.

het'er-og'y-nal (-năl), a. Zoöl. Heterogynous.

het'er-o-in-fec'tion, n. [hetero- + infection.] Infection from external sources.

het'er-o-in-oc'u-la-tion, n. [hetero- + inoculation.] Inoculation from one organism to another. — het'er-o-in-oc'u-la-ble, a.

het-er-ol'o-bous (hĕt'ĕr-ŏl'ō-bŭs; -ō-lō'bŭs), a. Having unequal lobes.

het'er-ol'o-gal, a. Math. Not correspondent. Obs.

het'er-o-ly'sin, n. [hetero- + lysin.] See HÆMOLYSIN.

het'er-ol'y-sis (hĕt'ĕr-ŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.; hetero- + lysis.] Physiol. Chem. The destructive action of a heterolysin. — het'er-o-lyt'ic (-ō-lĭt'ĭk), a.

het'er-om'al-lous (-ŏm'ă-lŭs), a. [hetero- + Gr. μαλλός a lock of wool] Bot. Spreading or turning in different directions; — applied to leaves of certain mosses, and opposed to homomallous.

het'er-o-mas'ti-gate (hĕt'ĕr-ō-măs'tĭ-gāt), a. [hetero- + Gr. μάστιξ whip.] Zoöl. Having het'er-ot'o-pism (hĕt'ĕr-ŏt'ō-pĭz'm) } n. [hetero- + Gr. het'er-ot'o-py (hĕt'ĕr-ŏt'ō-pĭ) } τόπος place.] Biol. Displacement; difference of position; esp., Med., deviation from the natural position, as of an organ or growth. — het'er-o-top'ic (-ō-tŏp'ĭk), het'er-ot'o-pous (-ŏt'ō-pŭs), a.

Het'er-ot'ri-cha (-ŏt'rĭ-kă), n. pl. [NL ; hetero- + Gr. θρίξ, gen. τριχός, a hair.] Zool. A group of ciliate Infusoria having fine cilia all over the body and a circle of larger ones around the anterior end. The genus Stentor is a familiar example. — het'er-ot'ri-chous (-kŭs), a.

het'er-o-troph'ic (hĕt'ĕr-ō-trŏf'ĭk), a. [See HETERO-; -TROPHY.] Plant Physiol. Deriving nourishment from without, — said of saprophytic or parasitic plants which are unable to perform photosynthesis. Opposed to autotrophic. — het'er-ot'ro-phy (-ŏt'rō-fĭ), n.

het'er-o-zy'gote (-zī'gōt ; -zĭ'gŏt), n. [hetero- + zygote.] Biol. A Mendelian hybrid which contains one or more recessive characters and which is therefore unstable, its progeny not being all true to type. Cf. HOMOZYGOTE, see MENDEL'S LAW. — het'er-o-zy'gous (-zī'gŭs), a.

het'man (hĕt'măn), n. ; pl. -MANS (-mănz). [Pol. hetman, prob. fr. G. hauptmann. Cf. ATAMAN.] A Cossack headman. The title of chief hetman is now held by the heir to the throne of Russia. — het'man-ate (-āt), n. — het'man-ship, n.

Heu'cher-a (hū'kĕr-ă), n. [NL. ; after Johann Heinrich Heucher, German botanist.] Bot. A genus of North American saxifragaceous herbs having small panicled flowers with entire petals and basal cordate or orbicular leaves. Several are ornamental. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus. See ALUMROOT.

heu'land-ite (hū'lăn-dīt), n [After H. Heuland, English mineralogist.] Min. A mineral of the zeolite family, often occurring in amygdaloid as foliated masses, and also as monoclinic crystals with pearly luster on the cleavage face. It is a hydrous silicate of calcium and aluminium, $H_4CaAl_2(SiO_3)_6{\cdot}3H_2O$.

heu-ris'tic (hū-rĭs'tĭk), a [Gr. εὑρισκειν to discover.] Serving to discover or find out; — applied specif. : a In the philosophy of Kant, to ideas of God, freedom, and immortality as not being demonstrable by things and events in time and space, but helping in their interpretation. b In pedagogy, to methods of investigation or teaching which lead the pupil to discover truths for himself.

He've-a (hē'vē-ă), n. [NL.] Bot. A small genus of South American euphorbiaceous trees having trifoliolate leaves, small panicled apetalous flowers with monadelphous stamens, and a capsular fruit. The species, esp. H. brasiliensis, yield Para rubber (which see).

hew (hū), v. t. ; pret. HEWED or HEWN (hūn) ; p. pr. & vb. n. HEW'ING. [AS. héawan ; akin to D. houwen, OHG houwan, G. hauen, Icel. höggva, Sw. hugga, Dan. hugge, Lith. kova battle, Russ. kovatĭ to hammer, forge. Cf. HAY cut grass, HOE.] 1. To cut by blows with an ax or other sharp instrument ; to chop ; hack ; — often with down, off, away, etc.

Hew them to pieces ; hack their bones asunder Shak.

2. To fell, as trees, by cutting ; to hew down.

3. To make, form, or shape by blows with a sharp instrument ; to cut, — often with out ; as, to hew out a sepulcher.

Rather polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope

4. To strike (a leg or legs), as in interfering. Obs.

Syn. — See CUT.

hew, v. i. To make cutting blows, as with an ax.

hewn (hūn), p. a. 1. Felled, cut, or shaped as with an ax ; roughly squared ; as, a house built of hewn logs.

2. Of stone, roughly dressed as with a hammer.

hex- (hĕks-), hex'a- (hĕk'să-). [Gr. ἕξ six, ἑξα- (in comp.) See SIX.] A prefix denoting six, sixth ; as, hexatomic ; specif., Chem. (also used adjectively), denoting the presence of six atoms or equivalents of that signified by the term to which it is prefixed ; as, *hexa*nitrate ; *hexa*hydro-.

hex'a-bas'ic (hĕk'să-bās'ĭk), a. [hexa- + basic.] Chem. Having six hydrogen atoms capable of replacement by basic atoms or radicals in forming salts or esters.

hex'a-bi'ose (-bī'ōs), n. [hexa- + biose.] Chem. A disaccharide yielding hexoses on hydration. All the common disaccharides belong to this class.

hex'a-canth (hĕk'să-kănth), hex'a-can'thous (-kăn'thŭs), a [hex- + Gr. ἄκανθα thorn.] Zool. Having six hooks ; specif., designating the early embryos of tapeworms.

hex'a-chord (-kôrd), n. [hexa- + Gr. χορδή string, chord : cf. F. hexacorde.] 1. Greek Music. a A diatonic series of six tones. b A major sixth.

2. Medieval Music. A diatonic series of six tones with their intervals of steps (-) and half steps (◡) as follows : ♩–♩–♩–♩◡♩–♩–♩ ; — said to have been introduced by Guido d' Arezzo (11th century) as an advance on the tetrachord, the ancient unit of analysis. Seven hexachords, beginning successively on G, C, and F, comprised all the recognized tones, in each hexachord named ut, re, mi, etc., according to their position. (See GAMUT and SOLMIZATION.) The hexachord was supplanted in the 18th century by the octave and the modern system of key relationship.

3. A six-stringed musical instrument.

hex'ac'id (hĕks'ăs'ĭd), a. [hex- + acid.] Chem. Capable of combining with six molecules of a monobasic acid to form a salt or ester, — said of bases and alcohols.

Hex'a-co-ral'la (hĕk'să-kŏ-răl'ă), Hex'a-co-ral'li-a (-ĭ-ă), n. pl. [NL. ; hexa- + Gr. κοράλλιον coral.] Zoöl. A subclass of Actinozoa having a hexamerous arrangement of the tentacles (which are usually simple), or septa, or both, as most of the recent corals and sea anemones. It is not adopted in some recent classifications. — hex'a-co-ral'lan (-ăn), hex'a-cor'al-line (-kŏr'ăl-ĭn ; -ĭn ; 183), a. & n.

hex'ad (hĕk'săd), n. [L. hexas, hexadis, the number six, Gr. ἑξάς, ἑξάδος, fr. ἕξ six.] 1. A group or series of six.

2. Chem. A hexad atom or element.

hex'ad, a. Chem. Having a valence or combining power of six. See VALENCE.

hex'a-dec'ane (hĕk'să-dĕk'ān), n. [hexa- + decane.] Chem. A hydrocarbon, $C_{16}H_{34}$, of the paraffin series, esp. the one having normal structure, which is a white semisolid occurring in petroleum, melting at about 18° C.

hex'a-ĕm'er-on (hĕk'să-ĕm'ĕr-ŏn), hex'a-hem'er-on (-hĕm'ĕr-ŏn), n. [L. hexaëmeron, fr. Gr. ἕξ six + ἡμέρα day ; cf. Gr. ἑξαήμερος.] The six days of the Creation, or a history of the six days' work of creation, as contained in the first chapter of Genesis ; also, a treatise on it. — hex'a-ĕm'er-ic, hex'a-hem'er-ic (-ĭk), a.

hex'a-gon (hĕk'să-gŏn), n. [L. hexagonum, Gr. ἑξάγωνος six-cornered ; ἕξ (akin to E. six) + γωνία angle.] Geom. A (plane) polygon of six angles and therefore six sides.

Regular Hexagon.

hex-ag'o-nal (hĕk-săg'ō-năl), a. a Having six angles and six sides ; six-sided ; divided into hexagons. b Having a hexagon as section or base. c Cryst. Designating, or belonging to, a crystal system in which six-sided forms occur. See CRYSTALLIZATION. — hexagonal number, any one of the figurate numbers, 1, 6, 15, 28, . . . formed from the arithmetical progression 1, 5, 9, 13, . . . and representable by dots arranged hexagonally. See FIGURATE.

hex'a-gram (hĕk'să-grăm), n. [hexa- + -gram.] 1. A figure formed by completing externally an equilateral triangle on each side of a regular hexagon ; the Pythagorean symbol.

Hexagram, 1.

2. Geom. The figure formed by any six intersecting lines. Pascal's (mystic) hexagram is a hexagram inscribed in a conic ; Brianchon's hexagram is the correlated hexagram circumscribed about a conic.

3. In Chinese literature, one of the sixty-four figures formed of six parallel lines (continuous or broken), forming the basis of the Yi Ching, or "Book of Changes." See FIVE CLASSICS.

Hex'a-gyn'i-a (-jĭn'ĭ-ă), n. pl. [NL. ; hexa- + Gr. γυνη a woman, female.] Bot. A disused Linnæan order of plants including those having flowers with six pistils. — hex'a-gyn'i-an (hĕk'să-jĭn'ĭ-ăn), a. — hex'a-gyn'ous (hĕk'săj'ĭ-nŭs), a. Bot. Pertaining to the order Hexagynia ; having six pistils.

hex'a-he'dral (hĕk'sa-hē'drăl), a. In the form of a hexahedron ; having six faces.

hex'a-he'dron (-drŏn), n. ; pl. E. -DRONS (-drŏnz), L. -DRA (-drȧ). [NL. ; hexa- + Gr. ἕδρα seat, base, fr. ἕζεσθαι to sit.] Geom. A polyhedron of six faces.

hex'a-hy'drate (-hī'drāt), n. [hexa- + hydrate.] Chem. A compound containing six molecules of water.

hex-am'er-ous (hĕk-săm'ĕr-ŭs), a. [hexa- + -merous.] 1. Bot. Consisting of six parts ; having floral whorls composed of six members ; — usually written 6-merous.

2. Zoöl. Having six parts, or parts in multiples of six, arranged radially, — said esp. of Actinozoa in which the tentacles and mesenteries are in multiples of six.

hex-am'e-ter (-ĕ-tĕr), n. [L., fr. Gr. ἑξάμετρος of six meters ; (sc. στίχος) hexameter verse ; ἕξ six + μετρον measure : cf. F. hexamètre. See SIX ; METER.] Pros. A verse of six measures, esp., the six-foot dactylic verse of Greek and Latin epic poetry, of which the first four feet may be either dactyls or spondees, the fifth is regularly a dactyl, and the sixth a spondee : thus, —

(– ◡ ◡ | – ◡ ◡ | – || – | – ◡ ◡ | – –)

The different time value of the dactyl in accentual verse (see FOOT) gives the English hexameter a different movement. Thus, —

Strongly it | bears us a-|long || on | swelling and | limitless | billows,
Nothing be-|fore || and | nothing be- hind || but the | sky and the | ocean. Coleridge.

hex-am'e-ter, a. a Having six metrical feet, esp. of dactyls and spondees. b Having six dipodies, — said of verse measured by dipodies, as, in classic usage, of verse of iambs, trochees, and anapæsts.

hex'a-meth'yl-ene (hĕk'să-mĕth'ĭ-lēn), n. [hexa- + methylene.] Org. Chem. A saturated cyclic hydrocarbon, C_6H_{12}, regarded as consisting of a ring of six methylene groups, — called also cyclohexane, hexahydrobenzene, and naphthene. It is a colorless volatile liquid of benzinelike odor. It is found in petroleum, esp. that from the Caucasus, in coal tar, etc., and is made artificially by reduction of benzene or by synthesis. See NAPHTHENE.

Hex-an'chi-dæ (hĕk-săn'kĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., orig. Hexanchus ; prob. so called from the contracted gill slits, fr. Gr. ἕξ six + ἄγχειν to choke.] Zoöl. A family of sharks of the group Diplospondyli, consisting of many fossil forms and a few living ones. They have one dorsal fin, and the palatoquadrate articulates with the postorbital part of the skull. The species are sometimes grouped in one genus, Notidanus, or divided into two, Hexanchus, with six pairs of gill clefts, and Heptranchias, with seven pairs. The best known is the cow shark (which see) hex'ane (hĕk'sān), n. [Gr. ἕξ six.] Chem. Any of five hydrocarbons, C_6H_{14}, of the paraffin series. All are colorless, volatile liquids. Normal hexane occurs in petroleum and is an important constituent of ligroin.

hex'an'gu-lar (hĕks'ăn'gū-lăr), a. [hex- + angular.] Having six angles or corners. — hex'an'gu-lar-ly, adv.

hex'a-ni'trate (hĕk'să-nī'trāt),n. [hexa- + nitrate.] Chem. A compound containing six nitrate groups (NO_3) in the molecule ; as, cellulose hexanitrate, $C_{12}H_{14}O_4(NO_3)_6$.

hex'a-pla (hĕk'să-plă), n. Etym. pl., but syntactically sing. [NL., fr. Gr. ἑξαπλᾶ, fr. ἑξαπλόος, contr. ἑξαπλοῦς, sixfold.] An edition or work in six texts or versions in parallel columns ; specif. [cap.], the edition of the Old Testament compiled by Origen, in the 3d century, consisting of the Hebrew text, a transliteration in Greek, and the Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, the Septuagint, Theodotion, and for some books, e.g., the poetical, one, two, or three more versions Cf. HEPTAPLA, OCTAPLA, ENNEAPLA, TETRAPLA. — hex'a-plar (-plăr), a.

het'er-ot'ro-pal (-ŏt'rō-păl), a. Bot Heterotropous.

het'er-o-troph' (hĕt'ĕr-ō-trŏf'), n. Bot. A heterotrophic plant.

het'er-o-tro'phi-a (-trō'fĭ-ă), n. [NL.] Med. Malnutrition het'er-o-tro'pi-a (-pĭ-ă), n [NL See HETERO- ; -TROPIC.] Med. Strabismus

het'er-ot'ro-pous (-ŏt'rō-pŭs), a. [Gr. ἑτερότροπος turning another way.] Amphitropous.

het'er-o-typ'ic. het'er-o-typ'i-cal. a. [hetero- + typic, typical] Biol. Designating mitotic division in which the daughter chromosomes remain united by their ends to form rings.

Het'er-ou'si-a (hĕt'ĕr-ōō'sĭ-ă ; -ou'sĭ-ă), Het'er-ou'si-an. etc Vars. of HETEROOUSIA, etc.

het'er-o-xan'thine (hĕt'ĕr-ō-zăn'thĭn ; -thēn), n. Also -thin. [hetero- + xanthine.] Chem. A methyl derivative of xanthine, $C_8H_8O_2N_4$, occasional in the urine

het'er-o-zy-go'sis (-zī-gō'sĭs), n [NL.] Biol The condition of being a heterozygote.

Hex'a-teuch (hĕk'sə-tūk), n. [hexa- + Gr. τεῦχος a tool, a book.] The first six books of the Old Testament; — so called in analogy to the Pentateuch, with which it combines Joshua. Adherents of the higher criticism generally hold the Hexateuch to be a composite whole made by combining certain more or less independent documents (the three chief ones being the Covenant Code, Deuteronomic Code, and Priestly Code) dealing largely with the same events, but composed at different periods or under different conditions. See LAW. — Hex'a-teuch'al (-tūk'əl), a.

hex'a-tom'ic (-tŏm'ĭk), a. [hex- + atomic.] Chem. a Consisting of six atoms; having six atoms in the molecule. b Hexad. c Having six replaceable atoms or radicals.

hex'a-va'lent (hĕk'sə-vā'lĕnt; hĕk-săv'ə-lĕnt), a. [hexa- + L. valens, -entis, p. pr. See VALENCE.] Chem. Having a valence of six; hexad.

hex'e-con'tane (hĕk'sĕ-kŏn'tān), n. [Gr. ἑξήκοντα sixty + -ane.] Chem. A solid hydrocarbon, $C_{60}H_{122}$, of the paraffin series, obtained by fusing myricyl iodide with sodium. It melts at 102° C.

hex-ei'ko-sane (hĕks-ī'kō-sān), n. [hex- + eikosane.] Chem. A hydrocarbon, $C_{20}H_{42}$, resembling paraffin.

hex'en-be'sen (hĕk'sĕn-bā'zĕn), n. [G., lit., witches' broom.] Bot. An abnormal brushlike growth (also called witches'-broom or witches'-besom) of small branches on various trees and shrubs, esp. conifers, due to infection by the mycelium of fungi of the order Exoascales.

hex'ine (hĕk'sĭn; -sēn), n. [Gr. ἕξ six.] Chem. Any of several isomeric hydrocarbons, C_6H_{10}. All the hexines are colorless, volatile liquids. Some are members of the acetylene series; others are diolefines.

hex'ite (hĕk'sīt), n. [Gr. ἕξ six.] Org. Chem. A hexahydric alcohol. The hexites are closely related to the hexoses, which they resemble in many properties, as sweetness. They are not fermented by yeast. Some hexites, as mannite, dulcite, and sorbite, occur in nature.

hex-oc'ta-he'dron (hĕk-sŏk'tə-hē'drŏn), n.; pl. E. -DRONS (-drŏnz), L. -DRA (-drə). [hexa- + octahedron.] Cryst. An isometric crystal having forty-eight equal triangular faces.

hex'ode (hĕk'sōd), a. [hexa- + 2d -ode.] Teleg. Designating a kind of multiplex telegraphy in which six messages can be transmitted at the same time.

hex-o'ic (hĕk-sō'ĭk), a. Chem. Pert. to or noting any of several isomeric acids of formula $C_6H_{12}O_2$. Normal caproic and isocaproic acids are hexoic acids.

hex'one (hĕk'sōn), a. [Gr. ἕξ six.] Chem. Designating certain compounds having six atoms of carbon in the molecule; as, the hexone bases, arginine, lysine, and histidine.

hex-on'ic (hĕk-sŏn'ĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to or designating any of several metameric acids having the formula $C_5H_6(OH)_5CO_2H$, as gluconic acid.

hex'ose (hĕk'sōs), n. [hex- + -ose.] Chem. Any member of a group of sugars containing six carbon atoms in the molecule. Some are widely distributed in nature, esp. in ripe fruits; many have been prepared synthetically. According to their aldehyde or ketone nature, they are called aldohexoses, as mannose, glucose, and galactose, or ketohexoses, as fructose and sorbinose.

hex'yl (hĕk'sĭl), n. [hex- + -yl.] Chem. A univalent hydrocarbon radical, C_6H_{13}, the radical of hexane.

hex'yl-ene (hĕk'sĭ-lēn), n. [hex- + -yl + -ene.] Chem. Any of several isomeric liquid hydrocarbons, C_6H_{12}, of the ethylene series, artificially prepared.

hey (hā), interj. [ME. hei; cf. D & G. hei.] An exclamation, as of interrogation, joy, surprise, or encouragement.

hey'day' (hā'dā'), interj. [Cf. G. heida, or hei da, D. hei daar, hey there.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder. B. Jonson.

hick'wall' (hĭk'wôl'), n. [Formerly also hyghwhele, higwale.] The European green woodpecker; sometimes, any of certain other European woodpeckers, as the lesser spotted woodpecker (Dendrocopus minor).

Hi-co'ri-a (hĭ-kō'rĭ-a, 201), n. [NL. See HICKORY.] Bot. A genus of juglandaceous trees, the hickories, distinguished from Juglans by the dehiscent husk of the fruit and the smooth or angled nut. There are about 15 species, all North American. The most valuable nut producers are the pecan (H. pecan), the shagbark (H. ovata), and the shellbark (H. lacinosa). The pignut (H. glabra) and the bitternut (H. minima) yield useful timber.

hid'age (hīd'ĭj), n. [From HIDE a quantity of land.] O. Eng. Law. A tax formerly paid to the royal exchequer for every hide of land; also, the value or measure assessed as a basis for the tax.

hi-dal'go (hĭ-dăl'gō), n.; pl. -GOS (-gōz). [Sp., contr. fr. hijo de algo, i. e., son of something; hijo son (fr. L. filius) + algo something, fr. L. aliquod. Cf. FIDALGO.] A title denoting a Spanish nobleman of the lower class. — hi-dal'go-ism (-ĭz'm), hi-dal'gism (-jĭz'm), n.

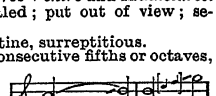
hid'den (hĭd''n), p. a. Concealed; put out of view; secret; not known; mysterious.

Syn. — Secret, covert, clandestine, surreptitious.

hidden fifths or octaves, Music, consecutive fifths or octaves, not sounded, but suggested or implied in the simultaneous movement up or down of two parts to a fifth or an octave.



Hidden Fifth and Octave. The progression of the voice parts from c' to g' and from d' to g'' suggests the intermediate f' and f'', which if sounded would produce a consecutive fifth and octave.

— h. quantity, Lat. Gram., the quantity of a vowel which is so situated that its natural quantity is not determinable by scansion, as when it comes before a double consonant, or before two or more consecutive consonants (other than a mute and a liquid) in the same word. — h. vowel, Lat. Gram., a vowel of hidden quantity.

hide (hīd), n. [AS. hīd, earlier hīged; prob. orig., land enough to support a family; cf. AS. hīwan, hīgan, members of a household, and E. HIND a peasant.] Eng. Hist. A measure of land, common in Domesday Book and old English charters, the quantity of which varied with the nature of the land and at different periods, as from 80 to 100 and 120 acres. The normal hide of the Domesday Book is 120 acres, and in it hide was the name for the ordinary fiscal unit of land measure used for southern England. The popular designation of this unit in northern England and Scotland was apparently plowgate, plowgang, or plowland, and in Kent the similar term was sulung. In Domesday Book and other Latin records hide was translated by LL. hida, plowland by LL. carucata (E. carucate). The hide is considered to have been originally the amount apportioned or considered requisite for the support of one free household, or, as defined in some early authorities, the amount that one ox plows in a year. Cf. CARUCATE.

hide, n. [ME. hide, hude, AS. hȳd; akin to D. huid, OHG. hūt, G. haut, Icel. hūð, Dan. & Sw. hud, L. cutis, Gr. κύτος; cf. Gr. σκῦτος skin, hide.] 1. The skin of an animal, either raw or dressed; — commercially applied to the undressed skins of full-sized oxen, horses, buffaloes, etc., those from small or young animals being called kips and those of calves, sheep, goats, etc., skins. The United States Treasury Department classes as hides of cattle only those weighing 25 pounds when raw or 12 pounds when dried, or 15 pounds when dried and salted. All under these weights are classed as skins.

Hide. 1. a b d c Butt; A B c a, A B d b Bends; a b f C Shoulder; a b f e Range; E, E Belly Offal; D, D, D Cheeks and Faces.

2. The human skin. Contemptuous or Humorous.

3. A cowhide or rawhide whip.

Syn. — See SKIN.

hide, v. t.; HID'ED (hīd'ĕd; -ĭd; 151); HID'ING (hīd'ĭng). 1. To take the hide from. Rare.

2. To flog, as with a cowhide. Colloq.

hide (hīd), v. t.; pret. HID (hĭd); p. p. HID'DEN (hĭd'n), HID; p. pr. & vb. n. HID'ING (hīd'ĭng). [ME. hiden, huden, AS. hȳdan; prob. akin to Gr. κεύθειν, and perh. to E. hoard.] 1. To conceal, or withdraw from sight; to put out of view; to secrete. "Where truth is hid." Shak.

A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Matt. v. 15.

2. To withhold from knowledge; to keep secret; to refrain from avowing or confessing.

Heaven from all creatures hides the book of fate. Pope.

3. To obstruct or bar the view of; as, a hill hides the sea.

4. To remove from danger; to shelter.

In the time of trouble he shall hide me Ps XXVII. 5.

5. Bib. To turn away, as the eyes, ears, or face, in inattention or displeasure.

Syn. — Cover, mask, veil, cloak, shroud, bury, screen, disguise, dissemble, suppress. — HIDE, CONCEAL, SECRETE, ENSCONCE. HIDE (the general term) and CONCEAL are often interchangeable. But conceal, in modern usage, often emphasizes more strongly than hide the element of intention or the effectiveness of the result, and is more frequently used of a refusal to divulge (see DISSEMBLE); as, "Let me go, that I may hide myself in the field" (1 Sam., XX. 5); "I found . . . some thickets of trees, in one of which there was a hollow large enough to conceal me entirely" (Defoe); "She . . . sharply turned about to hide her face" (Tennyson); "Dark priests and haughty warriors gazed on him with baffled wonder, for a hermit's vest concealed his face" (Shelley); "I'm glad to be constrained to utter that which torments me to conceal" (Shak.). To SECRETE, as here compared, is to deposit in a place of close hiding; the word frequently implies stealth, as, a squirrel secretes its winter supply of nuts. To ENSCONCE, in earlier usage to place one's self securely in hiding, is now to establish one's self snugly or comfortably, commonly with no idea of concealment; as, "She shall not see me: I will ensconce me behind the arras" (Shak.); "He entertained a show so seeming just, and therein so ensconced his secret evil, that jealousy itself could not mistrust" (id.); "The Bay of Monterey has been compared . . . to a bent fishing hook. . . . Monterey itself is cozily ensconced inside the barb" (Stevenson). See SECRET, SIMULATION, ASSUME.

to hide one's self, to put one's self in a condition to be safe; to secure protection. Prov. XXII. 3.

hide (hīd), v. i. To lie concealed; to keep one's self out of view; to be withdrawn from sight or observation.

Bred to disguise, in public 'tis you hide Pope.

hide and seek. A children's game played in various modes, the general character of the game being a search by one or more players for one or more of the others. The game, or its varieties, is variously called hide and go seek, hide and coop, hide and find, hide and fox, etc., hie spy or I spy, and formerly all hid, from a cry still sometimes used. "All hid, all hid;" an old infant play." Shak.

high'way' (hī'wā'), n. A main road or thoroughfare; hence, a road or way open to the use of the public, including in the broadest sense of the term ways upon water as well as upon land. Originally, highway designated a chief or principal way, which, being traveled by the public in general, was, early in English history, brought under the protection of the king's peace; and highway in this sense is distinguished from byway or bypath. Highway is still sometimes used in the specific sense of the thoroughfare from place to place, as where the context shows an intention to distinguish it from a private way intended primarily for the use of inhabitants of a particular locality. In its general sense, however, it is used to include any way, of whatever nature, which the law makes open to the use of all to pass, whether a carriageway, horseway, footway, or waterway, and whether a thoroughfare, a public bridge, or a cul de sac. With reference to the right of all the public to travel under equal conditions, it is sometimes construed as including railroads (68 Ill. 529, 5 Nev. 307; 18 Minn. 488; 56 Tex.); but other cases have held that highway will not include railroads for all purposes (155 Ind 312; 27 N. C. 310; 159 Pa. 331). The right of the public in a highway is an easement, unless the title of the land is vested in the public by the act of the owner With respect to the effect of bounding land by a highway in the description of a deed, see BOUNDARY.

Hin'du-ism, or Hin'doo-ism (hĭn'dōō-ĭz'm), n. The religious and social systems of those peoples of Hindustan who have accepted and developed the civilization and beliefs of the ancient Aryan invaders. Hinduism springs from the Vedic religion of the Aryan invaders, but it represents a profound modification of this, both by the social history of India and the animistic beliefs of the conquered Dravidian tribes. See Cit.; cf. BRAHMANISM, CASTE, VEDA.

Hinduism may fairly be described as Animism more or less transformed by philosophy or, to condense the epigram still further, as magic tempered by metaphysics. . . . Worship of elements, of natural features and forces, of deified men, ascetics, animals, of powers of life, organs of sex, weapons, primitive implements, modern machinery; sects which enjoin the sternest forms of asceticism; sects which revel in promiscuous debauchery; sects which devote themselves to hypnotic meditation; sects which practice the most revolting form of cannibalism — all of these are included in Hinduism, and each finds some order of intellect or sentiment to which it appeals And through all this bewildering variety of creeds there is traceable the influence of a pervading pessimism, of the conviction that life, and more especially the prospect of a series of lives, is the heaviest of all burdens that can be laid upon man The one ideal is to obtain release from the ever-turning wheel of conscious existence and to sink individuality in the impersonal spirit of the world.
Census of India, 1901

Hin'du-ize, or Hin'doo-ize (hĭn'dōō-īz), v. t. To subject, or conform, to Hindu culture and beliefs.

Syn. — Intimation, allusion. See SUGGESTION.

hint (hĭnt), v. t.; HINT'ED; HINT'ING. [See HINT, n.] To bring to mind by a slight mention or remote allusion; to suggest in an indirect manner; as, to hint a suspicion.

hint, v. i. To make an indirect reference, suggestion, or allusion; to allude vaguely to something.

We whisper, and hint, and chuckle. Tennyson.

to hint at, to allude to lightly, indirectly, or cautiously.
Syn. — HINT, INTIMATE, INSINUATE, IMPLY agree in the idea of suggestion. To HINT is to suggest indirectly or by remote or covert allusion. The word frequently implies lack of candor, frankness, or straightforwardness; as, "Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike, just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike" (Pope); "A lad may wink, and a girl may hint" (Tennyson); cf. "Why, no one makes any positive accusation; — but there were hints dropped" (Shelley). INTIMATE, in modern usage, frequently implies a lighter or more elusive suggestion than hint, but does not connote lack of candor or frankness; to INSINUATE, as here compared (see INGRATIATE), is to hint artfully or to convey an underhand suggestion; as, "I speak this not with any sly design to advise, but to intimate that I think you very Hip-pol'y-tus (hĭ-pŏl'ĭ-tŭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἱππόλυτος.] Gr. Myth. A son of Theseus by the Amazon queen Antiope (or, in some versions, her sister, Hip-pol'y-te (-tē), who invaded Attica in her behalf). Phædra, Theseus's wife, fell in love with Hippolytus, who was approached in her behalf by an attendant of hers without her knowledge. He publicly flouted her, and in shame and frenzy Phædra hanged herself, attaching to her wrist a tablet accusing Hippolytus of ravishment. Theseus, discovering the tablet, in an imprecation demanded that Poseidon take his son's life. This the god did by sending a sea monster which so terrified the horses of Hippolytus that they dragged him to death. The myth is the theme of a celebrated tragedy by Euripides, who gives as its motive the jealousy of Aphrodite for the exclusive service which Hippolytus bestows upon Artemis. See DIANA. — Hip-pol'y-tan (-tăn), a.

EQUINE.] The popular as well as [cap.] the generic name of a very large artiodactyl mammal (Hippopotamus amphibius) allied to the hogs, which was formerly found in the rivers of most parts of Africa, and is still common in the more remote districts. It has an enormous head and mouth, with long tusklike canine and incisor teeth, which yield a good quality of ivory. The feet are four-toed, the skin is bare and very thick, and the legs are very short. Next to the elephants it is the bulkiest existing quadruped, becoming at least 14 feet long. It is largely aquatic in habits, and can swim well and remain long under water. The hippopotamus feeds chiefly on aquatic plants, but also seeks its food on land and is sometimes destructive to cultivated crops. In western Africa a smaller species is found, which has been made the type of a separate genus or subgenus and called Chœropsis liberiensis. Several fossil forms from Europe and India are also known. hock (hŏk), n. [AS. hōh the heel; prob. akin to Icel. hāsinn hock sinew, LG. hacke, D. hak. Cf. HEEL.] 1. The tarsal joint, or the region of the tarsal joint, in the hind limb of digitigrade quadrupeds, as the horse (see HORSE, Illust.). It corresponds morphologically to the ankle of man, but is elevated from the ground and bends backward. It is a compound joint, containing a number of small bones (see TARSUS). In the horse most of the motion takes place between the lower end of the tibia and one of the tarsal bones (the astragalus). The prominence at the back of the hock is caused by the calcaneum and corresponds to the heel of man. The corresponding joint of a fowl's leg, popularly but incorrectly termed knee (see KNEE), is sometimes called the hock.

2. A piece cut by butchers, esp. in pork, from either the front or hind leg, just above the foot.

3. In man, the popliteal space. Rare.

3. Law. A day fixed by law for the suspension of business in whole or in part; a legal holiday. In the United States the legal holidays are determined by law, commonly by the statutes of the several States. There is no national legal holiday, Congress having no jurisdiction to appoint one, and the only common-law holiday is Sunday; but in common usage Sunday is not generally included under the term holiday or legal holiday. The holidays most widely observed in the UNITED STATES are: New Year's Day, the first day of January; Lincoln's Birthday, the 12th day of February; Washington's Birthday, the 22d day of February; Memorial, or Decoration, Day, the 30th day of May; Independence Day, the 4th of July; Labor Day, the first Monday in September; Christmas Day, the 25th day of December. The last Thursday in November is now regularly appointed by proclamation, by the national and State executives, as Thanksgiving Day, a day of thanksgiving and praise. In various States a day in the spring, as Good Friday, or the first Thursday in April, is regularly appointed by executive proclamation to be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, and observed as a holiday.
In the PHILIPPINES the legal holidays (established by act of the Philippine Commission) are New Year's Day, Washington's Birthday, Thursday and Friday of Holy Week, Memorial Day, Independence Day, Occupation, or Capitulation, Day (the 13th day of August), Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, and Rizal Day (December 30th). Special holidays in the HAWAIIAN ISLANDS are January 17, celebrating the downfall of the monarchy, Kamehameha Day (June 11), Regatta Day (the third Saturday of September), and November 28, celebrating the recognition of Hawaiian independence. In PORTO RICO, July 25, the anniversary of the landing of United States troops in 1898, is a holiday.
In the British Empire, the King's (Queen's) Birthday (either actual or arbitrary) and Victoria, or Empire, Day (the birthday of Queen Victoria, May 24) are observed as imperial holidays.
In ENGLAND AND IRELAND the days of the greater church feasts are observed as church holidays. The bank holidays include besides Good Friday and Christmas Day, the following statute holidays: Easter Monday, Whitmonday, first Monday in August, and Boxing Day, December 26 (or 27, as the case may be), and, for Ireland, St. Patrick's Day, March 17. In SCOTLAND the bank holidays are New Year's Day, Good Friday, first Monday in May, first Monday in August, and Christmas Day.
In the DOMINION OF CANADA, the public statutory holidays are Sundays, New Year's Day, Epiphany, Ash Wednesday, Good Friday, Easter Monday, Ascension Day, All Saints' Day, Conception Day, the two imperial holidays, Dominion Day (1st of July) and Labour Day (the first Monday in September), Christmas Day, and any day appointed by proclamation for a general fast or thanksgiving. Several of the Provinces in their local use omit some of the Dominion holidays.
In AUSTRALIA, the following holidays are common to all the States: New Year's Day, Good Friday, Easter Monday, King's Birthday, Christmas Day, and (exc. S. Australia) Boxing Day, and the two imperial holidays Anniversary Day is kept on Jan. 26 in New South Wales, Victoria, and W. Australia, and on Jan. 22 in S. Australia. Labour, or Eight Hour, Day varies in the different States. In NEW ZEALAND, the public statutory holidays are New Year's Day, Good Friday, Easter Monday, Prince of Wales' Birthday, Christmas Day, and King's Birthday. There are also various proclaimed holidays: Arbour Day, Labour Day, St. George's Day (April 23), St Patrick's Day (March 17), and St Andrew's Day (Nov. 30)
In BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA the holidays most widely observed are New Year's Day, the bank holidays of England, and the two imperial days

2. A holy place, a sanctuary. Obs. or Archaic.
3. [cap.] A title of the Pope; — formerly given to bishops generally, and to Byzantine emperors.
Syn. — HOLINESS, SANCTITY, RIGHTEOUSNESS. HOLINESS (the Saxon and more intimate word) suggests more frequently inherent or intrinsic state or quality, SANCTITY (the Latin and more formal term), a state or condition regarded rather as acquired or conferred; it often suggests sacredness or inviolability; as, "O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness" (Ps. xcvi. 9); "a blended holyness of earth and sky" (Wordsworth); "as undivided, so from errors free; as one in faith, so one in sanctity" (Dryden); "The peace of nature and of the innocent creatures of God seems to be secure and deep only so long as the presence of man and his restless and unquiet spirit are not there to trouble its sanctity" (De Quincey). RIGHTEOUSNESS (see RECTITUDE) differs from holiness in connoting rather unswerving rectitude or conformity of life to the divine law than spiritual purity or freedom from sin; as, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v. 20). See SACRED.

hol'o-graph (hŏl'ō-grȧf), n. [L. holographus entirely autograph, Gr. ὁλογράφος; ὅλος whole + γράφειν to write: cf. F. holographe, olographe.] A document, as a letter, deed, or will, wholly in the handwriting of the person from whom it proceeds and whose act it purports to be. In the Civil Law and the systems based upon it a holograph writing need not be attested by subscribing witnesses, notarial seal, etc., to be authenticated, but is said to prove itself. This is the case in Scotland, Quebec, Louisiana, and generally on the continent of Europe. At the common law holographic documents have no superior validity.

hol'o-he'dral (-hē'drăl), a. [holo- + Gr. ἕδρα seat, base.] Cryst. Having all the faces required by complete symmetry; — opposed to hemihedral and tetartohedral. — hol'o-he'drism (-drĭz'm), n.

hol'o-he'dron (-drŏn), n. Cryst. A holohedral form.

hol'o-hem'i-he'dral (-hĕm'ĭ-hē'drăl), a. [holo- + hemihedral.] Cryst. Presenting or designating hemihedral forms, as the pyritohedron, in which all the sectants have half the whole number of faces.

Hol'o-me-tab'o-la (-mē-tăb'ŏ-lȧ), n. pl. [NL. See HOLO-; METABOLA.] Zoöl. Those insects which have a complete metamorphosis; — equiv. to Heteromorpha.

hol'o-met'a-bol'ic (-mĕt'ȧ-bŏl'ĭk), a. Zoöl. Having a complete metamorphosis; — said of certain insects. See METAMORPHOSIS.

hol'o-me-tab'o-lism (-mē-tăb'ŏ-lĭz'm), n. Zoöl. In insects, complete metamorphosis.

hol'o-morph (hŏl'ō-môrf), n. [holo- + -morph.] Math. An expression that exhibits or simulates (within a certain region of value) the properties of a corresponding integral expression.

hol'o-mor'phic (hŏl'ō-môr'fĭk), a. [holo- + -morphic.] 1. Math. Designating a function that is one-valued and continuous and differentiable at every point (within its region of holomorphy); — called also integral function.

2. Cryst. Symmetrical in form as regards the two ends

Hemihedrism . . . is of various kinds, and these have been systematized as follows:—holomorphic, in which the occurring planes pertain equally to the upper and lower (or opposite) ranges of sectants, as in ordinary hemihedrons; and hemimorphic, in which each set of planes pertains to either the upper or the lower range, but not to both. Encyc. Brit.

Hol'o-my-a'ri-a (-mī-ā'rĭ-ȧ), Hol'o-my-a'ri-i (-rĭ-ī), n. pl. [NL.; holo- + Gr. μῦς muscle.] Zoöl. A primary division of nematode worms in which the muscles do not appear as separate cells when seen in a transverse section. — hol'o-my-a'ri-an (-ăn), a.

hol'o-phane (hŏl'ō-fān), a. [holo- + Gr. φαίνεσθαι to appear.] Designating, or pert. to, a system of illumination in which lamp globes of clear glass are ribbed, prismatically on the outside and simply on the inside, according to a special design so as to refract, reflect, and diffuse the light rays downwards and outwards in a desired (calculated) manner. — n. A holophane globe.

Section of Holophane Globe, showing Directions of some of the Light Rays.

hol'o-pho'tal (hŏl'ō-fō'tăl), a. [holo- + Gr. φῶς, φωτός, light.] Optics. Of or pertaining to the holophote; rendering available the whole of the light from a source.

hol'o-phote (hŏl'ō-fōt), n. An apparatus used in lighthouses, etc., in which, by means of lenses or reflectors, or both, practically all of the light from the lamp is collected and thrown in the desired direction.

hol'o-pho-tom'e-ter (-fō-tŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [holo- + photometer.] Physics. An integrating photometer provided with mirrors for the ready comparison of the relative intensities of the light emanating at different angles from, and of the total light emitted by, any given source.

ho-loph'ra-sis (hō-lŏf'rȧ-sĭs), n. [NL.; holo- + Gr. φράσις expression, phrase.] Expression of a phrase or sentence by a single word.

As I have heard my father Deal out in his long homilies. Byron.

hom'ing (hōm'ĭng), p. a. Home-returning.

homing pigeon, a pigeon trained to return home from a distance. Homing pigeons are used for sending back messages or for flying races. By carrying the birds away and releasing them at gradually increasing distances from home, they may be trained to return with more or less certainty and promptness from distances up to four or five hundred miles. If the distance is increased much beyond this, the birds are unable to cover it without stopping for a prolonged rest, and their return becomes doubtful. Homing pigeons are not bred for fancy points or special colors, but for strength, speed, endurance, and intelligence or homing instinct. Cf. CARRIER PIGEON.

Ho-min'i-dæ (hŏ-mĭn'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL, fr. L. homo, hominis, man.] Zool. The family of mammals to which the genus Homo, or mankind, belongs; the human race considered as a family of animals. ho'mo-cer'cal (-sûr'kăl), a. [homo- + Gr. κέρκος tail.] Zool. Having or designating a tail nearly or quite symmetrical, the vertebral column terminating at the middle of the base of the caudal fin, whose lobes are of equal size. The majority of teleost fishes have a tail apparently perfectly homocercal, but on dissection many of them, esp. when young, exhibit traces of the upturning of the tip of the spinal column characteristic of the heterocercal type (see HETEROCERCAL). The homocercal tail is therefore derived from the heterocercal, and, though superficially somewhat like the diphycercal, in reality it only represents the lower lobe of the diphycercal tail.

Homocercal Tail

ho'mo-cer'cy (hō'mō-sûr'sĭ ; hŏm'ō- ; cf. HOMO-), n. Zoöl. Possession of a homocercal tail ; state of being homocercal.

ho'mœ-o-, ho'me-o- (hō'mē-ō- ; hŏm'ē-ō- ; see note below), ho-moi'o- (hō-moi'ō-). Combining forms from Greek ὅμοιος, like, similar.

☞ "The etymological pronunciation would be hŏ-mē'ō-, as in hŏ-moi'ō- ; but usage favors hŏm'ē-ō-, or in popular use hŏ'mē-ō- ; the last esp. in homœopathy and its family (the only really popular members of the group)." Oxf. E. D. Good usage in the United States distinctly favors hŏ'mē-ō- in all words beginning with this prefix.

ho'mœ-o-ki-ne'sis, or ho'me-o- (-kĭ-nē'sĭs ; -kī-nē'sĭs), n. [NL. ; homœo- + Gr. κίνησις motion.] Biol. Mitotic cell division in which the different elements of the chromatin are divided equally between the daughter nuclei ; — opposed to heterokinesis.

ho'mœ-o-mer'ic (hō'mē-ō-mĕr'ĭk ; hŏm'ē-) } a. 1. Pert. to ho'mœ-o-mer'i-cal (-ō-mĕr'ĭ-kăl) } homœomery.
2. Consisting of homogeneous parts or particles.

ho'mœ-om'er-ous, ho'me-om'er-ous, a. 1. [See HOMŒOMERAL.] Having, or consisting of, similar parts.
2. Bot. Having the gonidia uniformly distributed through the hyphæ without evidence of stratification, — said of a lichen thallus. Cf. HETEROMEROUS, 2 b.

ho'mœ-om'er-y (-ŏm'ĕr-ĭ), n. ; pl. -ERIES (-ĭz). [L. homœomeria, fr. Gr. ὁμοιομερεια ; ὁμοιος like + μέρος part.] 1. The likeness or homogeneous character of the ultimate substances, "seeds," or particles, postulated by Anaxagoras as the foundation of like characteristics in nature ; also, the theory postulating this.
2. pl. The like particles or substances themselves ; also, homœomeric objects or characters.

ho'mœ-o-morph', or ho'me-o- (hō'mē-ō-môrf' ; hŏm'ē- ; see HOMŒO-), n. Cryst. A homœomorphous substance.

ho'mœ-o-mor'phism, or ho'me-o- (-môr'fĭz'm), n. [See HOMŒOMORPHOUS.] A near similarity of crystalline forms between unlike chemical compounds. See ISOMORPHISM.

ho'mœ-o-mor'phous, or ho'me-o- (-fŭs), a. [Gr. ὁμοιόμορφος of like form ; ὁμοιος like + μορφή form.] 1. Cryst. Manifesting homœomorphism.
2. Med. Of similar structure ; containing tissue elements like those of the surrounding organ, as morbid growth.

ho'mœ-o-te-leu'tic (hō'mē-ō-tē-lū'tĭk ; hŏm'ē-; see HOMŒO-), a. 1. Having the same or similar endings.
2. Due to homœoteleuton ; as, a homœoteleutic error.

ho'mœ-o-te-leu'ton (-tē-lū'tŏn), n. [L. homoeoteleuton like ending, rime, Gr. ὁμοιοτέλευτον, prop. neut. of ὁμοιοτέλευτος ending alike ; ὁμοιος like + τελευτη end.] The use or occurrence in writing of the same or similar endings near together, as in neighboring clauses or lines, whether happening by chance, or done purposely to give a rhythmical effect. Homœoteleuton is a frequent source of error in copied manuscripts.

ho'mœ-o-type', or ho'me-o- (hō'mē-ō-tīp' ; hŏm'ē-), n. [homœo- + -type.] Biol. A specimen which has been carefully compared with and identified with an original or primary type.

ho-mog'a-mous (hō-mŏg'ă-mŭs), a. [homo- + -gamous.] Bot. Characterized by homogamy.

ho-mog'a-my (-mĭ), n. [Gr. ὁμόγαμος married together ; ὁμός the same + γάμος marriage.] 1. Evolution. The interbreeding consequent upon some form of isolation or segregation of a group of individuals having a common character or characters differentiating them from those from which they are segregated. Romanes.
2. Bot. a State of having flowers alike throughout, as in the heads of cichoriaceous plants or the spikes of many sedges ; — opposed to heterogamy. b Maturation of the stamens and pistils at the same period ; — said of some perfect or monoclinous flowers, and opposed to dichogamy.

ho'mo-ge-ne'i-ty (hō'mō-jē-nē'ĭ-tĭ ; hŏm'ō- ; see HOMO-), n. ; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [Cf. F. homogénéité, LL. homogeneitas.] Homogeneous character or quality.

ho'mo-ge'ne-ous (-jē'nē-ŭs ; 277 : see HOMO-), a. [Gr. ὁμογενής ; ὁμός the same + γένος race, kind. See SAME ; KIN.]
1. Of the same kind or nature ; consisting of similar parts, or of elements of the like nature ; — opposed to heterogeneous ; as, homogeneous particles, elements, or principles.
2. Math. a Alike in nature and therefore comparable in size. b Of the same degree or dimensions in every term (in the symbols considered) ; as, a homogeneous equation.
3. Biol. Homogenous homogeneous coordinates. See COÖRDINATE, n., 2. — h. linear group, Alg., the group belonging to the linear transformation of one set of n variables into another. — h. part (of a continuum C), Math., a perfect and connected continuum H, not the whole of C, having points within it and also on it, the latter forming its boundary, and such that if a and b are within it, there may be found a number m for every vicinity ϵ, however small, and points $p_1, p_2, \ldots p_m$, so that the vicinity of a contains p_1 and only points within H, and so for $p_1, p_2, \ldots p_m, b$. — h. roof, Arch., a roof forming a solid shell of one material. — h. strain, Physics, a strain such that parallel lines drawn through the body before it will be parallel after it. — h. whole. See WHOLE.
— ho'mo-ge'ne-ous-ly, adv. — ho'mo-ge'ne-ous-ness, n.

ho'mo-gen'e-sis (hō'mō-jĕn'ē-sĭs ; hŏm'ō- ; see HOMO-), n. [homo- + -genesis.] Biol. That method of reproduction in which the successive generations are alike, no alternation of generations (which see) taking place.

ho-mog'e-nous (hō-mŏj'ē-nŭs), a. [See HOMOGENY.] Biol. Having a resemblance in structure due to descent from a common progenitor ; — applied to animals or plants, and to their parts. Opposed to homoplastic.

ho'mo-gen-tis'ic (hō'mō-jĕn-tĭz'ĭk ; hŏm'ō- ; see HOMO-), a. [homo- + gentisin.] Physiol. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline acid, melting at 147° C., normally present in small amount in the urine and more abundant in cases of alkaptonuria. Chemically it is dihydroxyphenyl-acetic acid, $C_6H_3(OH)_2CH_2{\cdot}CO_2H$.

ho-mog'e-ny (hō-mŏj'ē-nĭ), n. [Gr. ὁμογένεια ; ὁμός the same + γένος race, kind.] 1. Homogeneity. Obs.
2. Biol. Correspondence between parts or organs due to descent from the same ancestral type ; true homology ; — opposed to homoplasy or homoplasmy. Lankester.

ho-mog'o-ny (-nĭ), n. [Gr. ὁμόγονος ; ὁμός the same + γόνος offspring.] Bot. The condition of having one kind of flowers with the androecium and gynœcium of uniform relative length ; — opposed to heterogony. — ho-mog'o-nous (hō-mŏg'ō-nŭs), a. — ho-mog'o-nous-ly, adv.

hom'o-graph (hŏm'ō-grăf ; hō'mō- ; 277 : see HOMO-), n. [Gr. ὁμογραφος with the same letters ; ὁμος + γράφειν to write.] One of two or more words identical in orthography, but different in derivation and meaning, as, fair, market, and fair, beautiful ; lead, to conduct, and lead, metal.

ho'mo-graph'ic (hō'mō-grăf'ĭk ; hŏm'ō- ; see HOMO-), a. [homo- + -graphic.] 1. Geom. In one-to-one correspondence of points with each other ; superimposable by central projections on planes. In such figures collinears correspond to collinears, and the cross ratios of two corresponding sets are equal (Chasles).
2. Of or pertaining to, or consisting of, homographs.
3. Employing a single and separate character to represent each sound ; — said of strictly phonetic spelling. Opposed to heterographic. homographic substitution or transformation. = LINEAR SUBSTITUTION b.

ho-mog'ra-phy (hŏ-mŏg'rā-fĭ), n. 1. Homographic spelling.
2. Geom. One-to-one correspondence between two figures composed of the same kind of elements (points, lines, planes, or spaces) ; a homology, as of two figures in perspective.

ho-moi'o- (hō-moi'ō-). Combining form from Greek ὁμοιος, like. See HOMŒO-.

ho-moi'o-ther'mal (-ō-thûr'măl), ho'mœ-o-, or ho'me-o- (hō'mē-ō- ; hŏm'ē-ō-), a. [Gr. ὁμοιος like + thermal.] Zoöl. Preserving a uniform body temperature, in spite of variations in the surrounding medium, as warm-blooded animals ; hence, equivalent to warm-blooded.

ho'moi-ou'si-a (hō'moi-ōō'sĭ'-ă ; -ou'sĭ'-ă), n. [NL. See HOMOIOUSIAN.] Eccl. Similar nature or substance ; — applied by Homoiousians to the relation of Father and Son.

ho'moi-ou'si-an (-ăn), a. [Gr. ὁμοιούσιος, ὁμοιοούσιος, of like substance ; ὁμοιος like + οὐσία the substance, being, essence.] Eccl. Hist. Holding, or pert. to the belief, that the Son was of like, but not of the same, essence or substance with the Father ; — opposed to homoousian. — n. [cap.] One of the Semi-Arians of the 4th century, who were homoiousian in faith.

ho'mo-lat'er-al (hō'mō-lăt'ẽr-ăl ; hŏm'ō- ; see HOMO-), a. [homo- + lateral.] Math. a On the same side. b Homohedral.

ho-mol'o-gate (hō-mŏl'ō-gāt), v. t. ; HO-MOL'O-GAT'ED (-gāt'-ĕd) ; HO-MOL'O-GAT'ING (-gāt'ĭng). [LL. homologatus, p. p. of homologare to homologate, Gr. ὁμολογεῖν to assent, agree. See HOMOLOGOUS.] 1. Civil Law. To approve ; allow ; confirm ; as, the court homologates a proceeding ; specif., Scots Law, to ratify or validate (a document or transaction that is defective or informal).
2. To bring into consonance ; to homologize. Rare.

ho-mol'o-gate, v. i. To be or act in accord or agreement.

ho-mol'o-ga'tion (-gā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. homologation.] Civil & Scots Law. Act of homologating ; confirmation or ratification, as of a report, award, or defective instrument.

ho'mo-log'ic (hō'mō-lŏj'ĭk ; hŏm'ō-) } a. Pert. to, or ho'mo-log'i-cal (-lŏj'ĭ-kăl ; see HOMO-) } characterized by, homology ; homologous. — ho'mo-log'i-cal-ly, adv.

ho-mol'o-gize (hō-mŏl'ō-jīz), v. t. ; -GIZED (-jīzd) ; -GIZ'ING (-jīz'ĭng). To be or become homologous.

ho-mol'o-gize, v. t. To make homologous ; specif., Biol., to determine the existence of homology between, as parts.

hom'o-lo-gou'me-na (hŏm'ō-lō-gōō'mē-nă ; -gou'mē-nă), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ὁμολογουμενα things conceded, p. pr. pass. of ὁμολογεῖν to concede. See HOMOLOGOUS.] The books of the New Testament usually called protocanonical ; — disting. from antilegomena. See DEUTEROCANONICAL.

‖ ho'mo an-ti'qua vir-tu'te ac fi'de [L.] A man of the ancient virtue and fidelity ho'mo-bar'ic (hō'mō-băr'ĭk ; hŏm'ō-), a [homo- + Gr. βάρος weight.] Of uniform weight

ho'mo-cerc (hō'mō-sûrk ; hŏm'ō-), a. Zool. Homocercal. — n. A homocercal fish.

ho'mo-cer-cal'i-ty (-sē-kăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Zool. Homocercy.

ho'mo-cer'e-brin, n. [homo- + cerebrin.] Physiol. Chem. A substance similar to, or identical with, cerebrin.

ho'mo-chro'ma-tism, n. [homo- + chromatism.] Bot. Uniformity of coloration or marking in flowers of the same species. Cf. HETEROCHROMATISM. — ho'mo-chro-mat'ic, a. [mochromous.

ho'mo-chro'mic, a. Bot. Homochromous.

ho-moch'ro-nous (hō-mŏk'rō-nŭs), a. [homo- + Gr. χρόνος time : cf. ὁμόχρονος contemporaneous.] Biol. Homœochronous.

Ho'mo-cœ'la (hō'mō-sē'lă), n. pl [NL. ; homo- + Gr. κοίλον a hollow.] Zool. An order of calcareous sponges having the endoderm entirely of flagellate collared cells [HOMO-.

ho'mo-cre'o-sol, n. Chem. See ho'mo-dem'ic (hō'mō-dĕm'ĭk), a. [homo- + deme, 2.] Biol. Developed from the same deme.

hom'o-dox (hŏm'ō-dŏks), hom'o-dox'i-an (-dŏk'sĭ-ăn), a [Gr. ὁμοδοξος ; ὁμός same + δόξα opinion.] Having the same opinion. Obs.

ho-mod'ro-mal (hō-mŏd'rō-măl), ho'mo-dro'mous (hō'mō-drō'mŭs), a. Homodromous.

ho'mo-dy'na-mous (-dī'nă-mŭs ; -dĭ'nă-m ŭs), a. Biol. a Pertaining to, or characterized by, homodynamy. b Alike in controlling force.

ho'mo-dy'na-my (-mĭ), n. [Gr. ὁμοδύναμος of like power ; ὁμός the same + δύναμις power.] Biol. The homology between metameres. [HOMOIAN.

ho-mœ'an (hō-mē'ăn). Var. of ho-mœ'o-arch'y (hō-mē'ō-ar'-kĭ), n. [homœo- + -archy beginning.] Similarity of the beginnings of two neighboring words. Cf. HOMŒOTELEUTON ho'mœ-o-chro-mat'ic, or ho'me-o-, n [homœo- + chromatic.] Zool. Of similar color. — ho'mœ-o-chro'ma-tism, or ho'me-o-, n. ho'mœ-och'ro-nous, or ho'me-o- (hō'mē-ŏk'rō-nŭs ; hŏm'ē-). a. [homœo- + Gr χρόνος time] Biol Appearing at the same age or period in life in the offspring as in the parent ; — said of organs, traits, tendencies, etc.

ho'mœ-o-crys'tal-line, or ho'me-o-, n. [homœo- + crystalline] Petrog. Having the crystals of the constituent minerals equally developed ; granitic ho'mœ-og'e-nous, or ho'me-og'- (hō'mē-ŏj'ē-nŭs), a. [Gr. ὁμογενής. See HOMŒO- ; -GENOUS] Of a similar kind. — ho'mœ-o-gen'e-sis, or ho'me-o- (-ō-jĕn'ē-sĭs), n.

ho'mœ-om'er-æ (hō'mē-ŏm'ĕr-ē ; hŏm'ē-), n. pl. [NL.] = HOMŒOMERY, 2.

ho'mœ-o-me-ri'a (-ō-mē-rĭ'ă ; -mē'rĭ-ă), n. ; L. pl. -RIÆ. [L.] = HOMŒOMERY.—ho'mœ-o-me'ri-an (-mē'rĭ-ăn), n. — ho'mœ-o-me'ri-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n.

ho'mœ-oph'o-ny, or ho'me-oph'- (hō'mē-ŏf'ō-nĭ ; hŏm'ē-), n. [homœo- + -phony.] Similarity of sound.

ho'mœ-o-pla'si-a (-ō-plā'zhĭ-ă; -zĭ-ă), ho'mœ-op'la-sy (-ō-p'l ă-sĭ), n. [NL homœoplasia. See HOMŒO- ; -PLASIA.] Med. Formation of tissue similar to normal tissue.—ho'mœ-o-plas'tic, a.

ho'mœ-o-se'mant (hō'mē-ō-sē'-mănt ; hŏm'ē-), n. [homœo- + Gr σημαντός marked.] A word of nearly the same meaning as another word. Rare.

ho-mœ'o-tel (hō-mē'ō-tĕl), n. = HOMŒOTELEUTON.

ho-mœ'o-ther'mal, a. = HOMOIOTHERMAL.

ho'mœ-ot'o-py (hō'mē-ŏt'ō-pĭ ; hŏm'ē-), n. [homœo- + Gr τόπος place.] = HOMŒOTELEUTON.

ho'mœ-o-typ'i-cal, or ho'me-o- (-ō-tĭp'ĭ-kăl), a. [homœo- + typical.] Biol. Designating mitosis distinguished by shortness of the chromosomes and irregular arrangement of the daughter chromosomes. Flemming.

ho'mœ-ou'si-a (hō'mē-ōō'sĭ'-ă ; -ou'sĭ'-ă ; hŏm'ē-). ho'mœ-ou'si-an (-ăn). Vars. of HOMOIOUSIA, -OUSIAN.

ho'mœ-o-zo'ic, or ho'me-o- (-ō-zō'ĭk), a. [homœo- + Gr. ζωή life.] Biogeog. Pertaining to or designating a region or regions throughout which the forms of life are the same or similar.

ho'mo-fo'cal, a. [homo- + focal.] Math. = CONFOCAL.

ho'mo-gan'gli-ate, a. [homo- + gangliate.] Zool. Having symmetrically arranged nervous ganglia, as the Articulata.

ho'mo-ge-ne'ic (-jē-nē'ĭk), -ge-ne'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), -gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. = HOMOGENEOUS.

ho-mog'e-nize (hō-mŏj'ē-nīz), v. t. To make homogeneous. Rare. — ho-mog'e-ni-za'tion (-nĭ-zā'shŭn ; -nĭ-zā'shŭn), n.

ho-moi'o-chla-myd'e-ous (-ō-klă-mĭd'ē-ŭs). Var of HOMOCHLAMYDEOUS.

hom'o-mer'i-a, homœimerous, -omery, etc. Vars. of HOMŒOMERIA, etc. [OMERIC ho-moi'o-me'ri-ous, a. = HOMŒho-moi'op-to'ton (hō-moi'ŏp-tō'tŏn), n. [NL., fr Gr ὁμοιοπτωτος in a like case ; ὁμοιος like + πτωτός falling.] Rhet. A figure in which the several parts of a sentence end with the same inflection. Obs.

ho-moi'o-te-leu'tic (hō-moi'ō-tē-lū'tĭk), ho-moi'o-te-leu'ton (-tŏn). Vars. of HOMŒOTELEUTIC, HOMŒOTELEUTON ho-moi'o-ther'mous (-ō-thûr'-mŭs), a. Zool. Homoiothermal.

ho'mo-lec'i-thal (hō'mō-lĕs'ĭ-thăl ; hŏm'ō-), a. [homo- + Gr. λέκιθος yolk of an egg.] Biol. Having the yolk small in amount and nearly uniformly distributed ; — said of certain eggs. Practically equiv. to alecithal. [Obs.

ho-mol'o-gal, a. Homologous.

ho-mol'o-gist (hō-mŏl'ō-jĭst), n. A student of homologies Rare ho-mol'o-giz'er (-jīz'ẽr), n. One who homologizes. [Homologue.

ho-mol'o-gous (hŏ-mŏl'ŏ-gŭs), a. [Gr. ὁμόλογος assenting, agreeing; ὁμός the same + λόγος speech, discourse, proportion, λέγειν to say, speak.] Having the same relative position, proportion, value, or structure; specif.: a Med. Having the same structure as the normal tissue of the part; — said of morbid growths. b Biol. Corresponding in type of structure; exhibiting homology. See HOMOLOGY b. Cf. ANALOGOUS. c Physiol. Chem. Having the relation that exists between an immune serum and the particular species of bacterium by means of which it is prepared; as, a bacillus placed in its homologous serum. d Chem. Characterized by homology (see HOMOLOGY c); as, a homologous series; homologous compounds. e Math. (1) Related as two antecedents or two consequents in a proportion, or as any two corresponding parts of two similar figures. (2) Modern Geom. Being in homology; homologic. See HOMOLOGY.

homologous stimulus. Physiol. See STIMULUS.

hom'o-lo-graph'ic (hŏm'ŏ-lō-grăf'ĭk), a. [See HOMALOGRAPHIC.] Preserving the mutual relations of parts, esp. as to size and form; maintaining proportions. — homolographic projection, a mapping of parts of the earth's surface so as to maintain the relative areas.

hom'o-logue (hŏm'ŏ-lŏg; 277: see HOMO-), n. [Cf. F. homologue, a. See HOMOLOGOUS.] That which is homologous to something else; as, the corresponding sides, etc., of similar polygons are the homologues of each other, the members or terms of a homologous series in chemistry are the homologues of each other; specif., Biol., a part or organ exhibiting homology (see HOMOLOGY b) with some other part or organ. Cf. ANALOGY, ANALOGUE, Biol.

ho-mol'o-gy (hŏ-mŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. [Gr. ὁμολογια agreement. See HOMOLOGOUS.] Quality of being homologous; relation of correspondence. Specif.: a Math. A one-to-one correspondence of two coplanar figures whereby the junction lines of corresponding points are copunctal in the center of homology and the junction points of correspondent lines are collinear on the axis of homology. b Biol. Correspondence in type of structure between parts or organs of different organisms due to differentiation by the process of evolution from the same or a corresponding part or organ of some remote ancestor, also, true correspondence in type of structure between different parts of the same individual. Distinguished from analogy, or resemblance in function (or sometimes also in form) between organs of different origin. The relation in structure between the leg and arm of a man, and that between the arm of a man, the fore leg of a horse, the wing of a bird, and the pectoral fin of a fish, are familiar examples of homology. c Chem. The relation existing between the compounds of a series whose successive members possess, in addition to similarity of structure, a regular difference in formula. It is usually attended by a regular variation in physical properties. Cf. HETEROLOGY. The term is used esp. with reference to series of carbon compounds in which the regular difference is CH_2, as the paraffins, CH_4, C_2H_6, C_3H_8, etc., or the fatty acids, CH_2O_2, $C_2H_4O_2$, $C_3H_6O_2$, etc. In an extended sense, chemical elements of the same group, as chlorine, bromine, and iodine, are said to be in homology with one another.

‖ ho'mo men-su'ra (hō'mō mĕn-sū'rȧ), [L.] Man the measure; — the doctrine that "man is the measure of all things," first propounded by Protagoras (about 491–421 B. C.) in the phrase πάντων χρημάτων μετρον ἄνθρωπος, the idea being that things have meaning only in relation to human interest.

> Psychology, pure and simple, has always . . accepted, tacitly at least, the homo mensura doctrine. James Ward.

ho'mo-mor'phism (hō'mŏ-môr'fĭz'm; hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), n. Lit., likeness in form; as: a Biol. = HOMOMORPHY. b Bot. State of having perfect flowers of only one type or kind; — opposed to heteromorphism or heterogony. See HETEROGONOUS DIMORPHISM, HETEROGONOUS TRIMORPHISM. c Zoöl. Similarity of the larva and the adult, as in insects which have only an incomplete metamorphosis; hemimetaboly. — ho'mo-mor'phic (-fĭk), ho'mo-mor'phous (-fŭs), a.

ho'mo-mor'phy (hō'mŏ-môr'fĭ, hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), n. [homo- + Gr. μορφή form.] Biol. Similarity of form (esp. resemblance in external characters) with different fundamental structure; superficial resemblance between organisms of different groups.

hom'o-nym (hŏm'ŏ-nĭm; hō'mŏ-; 277; see HOMO-), n. Also hom'o-nyme. [Cf. F. homonyme. See HOMONYMOUS.] 1. A word having the same sound as another, but differing from it in meaning, as bare and bear.

2. One of two or more persons or things having the same name; a namesake.

3. Biol. A name preoccupied by its earlier application to a different group of the same category and hence untenable under the law of priority. Thus Abies alba Michaux (1803) is a homonym of Abies alba Miller (1768). The former name applies to the American white spruce (Picea canadensis), the latter to the European silver fir (Abies picea).

Syn. — See SYNONYM.

hom'o-nym'ic (hŏm'ŏ-nĭm'ĭk; hō'mŏ-; see HOMO-), a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or being, homonyms.

2. Music. Having the same name, but different in mode. Thus, the scale or key of C major and that of C minor are homonymic scales or keys. J. H. Cornell.

ho-mon'y-mous (hŏ-mŏn'ĭ-mŭs), a. [L. homonymus, Gr. ὁμώνυμος; ὁμός the same + ὄνυμα, for ὄνομα name. See SAME; NAME.] 1. Having the same name or designation, — opposed to heteronymous.

2. Standing in the same relation; specif., Optics, pertaining to or designating uncrossed images of an object seen double. See DIPLOPIA.

3. Having the same sound, but different meaning; hence, equivocal; ambiguous.

ho-mon'y-my (-mĭ), n. [Gr. ὁμωνυμια.] Homonymous state or character.

ho'mo-ou'si-a (hō'mŏ-ōō'sĭ-ȧ; -ou'sĭ-ȧ; hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), n. [NL. See HOMOOUSIAN.] Eccl. The same nature or substance; — applied by the Homoousians to the relation of Father and Son.

ho'mo-ou'si-an (hō'mŏ-ōō'sĭ-ăn; -ou'sĭ-ăn; hŏm'ŏ-; 277), a. [Gr. ὁμοούσιος; ὁμός the same + οὐσια being, essence, substance.] Eccl. Hist. Holding, in accordance with the Nicene Creed, that the Son is consubstantial with the Father; also, pert. to the belief or doctrine that so holds; — opposed to homoiousian. — n. [cap.] One of those who in the 4th century held the homoousian doctrine, accepting the Nicene Creed. — Ho'mo-ou'si-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n. — Ho'mo-ou'si-an-ist, n.

hom'o-phone (hŏm'ŏ-fōn; hō'mŏ-; see HOMO-), n. [homo- + Gr. φαινεσθαι to appear.] In speech reading by the deaf, a word that has the same appearance (with respect to the visible vocal organs) as another word, as bat, mat, pat — ho-moph'e-nous (hŏ-mŏf'ē-nŭs), a.

hom'o-phone (-fōn), n. (usually in pl.). [Cf. F. homophone. See HOMOPHONOUS.] 1. A letter or character which expresses a like sound with another.

2. A word having the same sound as another, but differing from it in meaning and usually in spelling; as, all and awl; bare and bear; rite, wrute, right, and wright.

ho'mo-phon'ic (hō'mŏ-fŏn'ĭk; hŏm'ŏ-) } a. [Gr. ὁμόho-moph'o-nous (hŏ-mŏf'ŏ-nŭs) } φωνος; ὁμός the same + φωνή sound, tone: cf. F. homophone.] 1. Music. a Orig., sounding alike; of the same pitch; unisonous; — opposed to antiphonic. b Of or pertaining to the style of music which has one predominating voice part or melody, the other parts merely supplying the harmonies; monodic; — opposed to polyphonic.

2. Having or representing the same sound; as, Greek φ and English ph, bare and bear, etc. Cf. HOMOPHONE.

ho'mo-phyl'ic (hō'mŏ-fĭl'ĭk; hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), a. Biol. Relating to homophyly; belonging to the same race.

ho-moph'y-ly (hŏ-mŏf'ĭ-lĭ), n. [homo- + Gr. φυλή a clan.] Lit., sameness of race; hence: Biol. Resemblance due to common ancestry; — opposed to homomorphy. Haeckel.

hom'o-plast (hŏm'ŏ-plăst; hō'mŏ-; see HOMO-), n. Biol. a An idorgan composed of similar plastids; — opposed to alloplast. Haeckel. b One of two or more homoplastic parts.

ho'mo-plas'tic (hō'mŏ-plăs'tĭk; hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), a. [homo- + -plastic.] a Of or pert. to homoplasy; as, homoplastic organs. b Of or relating to a homoplast.

ho-mop'la-sy (hŏ-mŏp'lȧ-sĭ; hō'mŏ-plăs'ĭ; hŏm'ŏ-), n. Also ho'mo-plas'sy. [homo- + -plasy.] Biol. Correspondence between parts or organs not due to their modification from a common ancestral type, but acquired independently; analogy; — the opposite of homogeny.

ho'mo-po'lar (hō'mŏ-pō'lȧr; hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), a. [homo- + polar.] a Unipolar. b Biol. Having the poles of the primary axis alike.

homopolar dynamo, Elec., an acyclic dynamo producing direct current without commutation; — called also unipolar dynamo. In one machine of this class the armature is an iron drum bearing 12 insulated cylindrical segments of copper, revolving at 1,200 revolutions per minute between two north poles projecting from the middles of two opposite sides of a field magnet resembling a square frame in shape.

Ho-mop'ter-a (hŏ-mŏp'tĕr-ȧ), n. pl. [NL; homo- + Gr. πτερόν wing.] Zoöl. One of the two chief suborders of Hemiptera. It comprises the cicadas, lantern flies, leaf hoppers, spittle insects, tree hoppers, plant lice or aphids, psyllids, aleyrodids, and scale insects. Its members, when winged, may generally be distinguished by the uniform membranous texture of the fore wings, which are usually held back over the abdomen, slanting toward the sides in a rooflike position when the insect is at rest. — ho-mop'ter-an (-ăn), a. & n. — ho-mop'ter-ous (-ŭs), a.

ho-mos'po-rous (hŏ-mŏs'pō-rŭs; hō'mŏ-spō'rŭs; 201), a. [homo- + spore.] Bot. Having asexual spores of one kind only, as the Lycopodiaceæ and Equisetaceæ; — opposed to heterosporous. — ho-mos'po-ry (hŏ-mŏs'pō-rĭ), n.

ho'mo-styled' (hō'mŏ-stīld'), a. [homo- + style.] Bot Having uniform styles; homogonous.

ho'mo-sty'lism (-stī'lĭz'm), n. Bot. Homogony; state of having homostyled flowers.

ho'mo-tax'is (hō'mŏ-tăk'sĭs; hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), n. [NL.; homo- + Gr. τάξις arrangement.] Similarity in arrangement; esp., Geol., similarity in order of arrangement of fossiliferous deposits which are not necessarily contemporaneous. — ho'mo-tax'i-al (-tăk'sĭ-ăl), a. — ho'mo-tax'i-al-ly, adv. — ho'mo-tax'ic (-sĭk), a.

ho'mo-thet'ic (-thĕt'ĭk), a. [homo- + Gr. θετός, verbal adj. fr. τιθέναι to place.] Math. Similar and similarly placed, as any two parallel plane sections of a cone.

homothetic figures, those that consist of pairs of points, P and P', Q and Q', in one-to-one correspondence, such that all junction lines PP', QQ', meet in a center of similitude O, and the ratio of similitude (that is, $\frac{OP}{OP'} = \frac{OQ}{OQ'}$) is constant. When O is on the same side of P and P', the figures are directly homothetic; when between P and P', they are inversely homothetic.

ho'mo-tŏ'nous (hō-mŏt'ŏ-nŭs), a. [L. homotonus, Gr. ὁμότονος; ὁμός the same + τόνος tone.] Of the same tenor or tone; without variation. — ho-mot'o-nous-ly, adv.

hom'o-type (hŏm'ŏ-tīp; hō'mŏ-; see HOMO-), n. [homo- + -type.] Biol. 1. That which has the same fundamental type of structure with something else; thus, the right arm is the homotype of the right leg; one arm is the homotype of the other, etc.

2. A homœotype.

ho'mo-typ'y (hō'mŏ-tīp'ĭ; hŏm'ŏ-; see HOMO-), n. [See HOMOTYPE.] Biol. The relation existing between homotypes; — used specif. by Haeckel to denote serial homology.

ho'mo-zy'gote (-zī'gōt; -zĭg'ōt), n. [homo- + zygote.] Biol. An animal or plant in which the characters are stable, having been received in the dominant form from both parents, or in the recessive form from both parents. Such an individual therefore breeds true to type. Cf. HETEROZYGOTE, and see MENDEL'S LAW. — ho'mo-zy'gous (-zī'gŭs), a.

hom'rai (hŏm'rī), n. [Native name in Nepal.] A large hornbill (Dichoceros bicornis) of India and the Malay countries, having the casque large and hollowed above, and ending in two points in front. See HORNBILL, Illust.

Syn.—Uprightness, trustworthiness, faithfulness, equity, justice, fairness.—HONESTY, HONOR, INTEGRITY, PROBITY agree in the idea of uprightness. HONESTY is the general term for freedom from fraud or imposture; HONOR, as here compared (see REPUTATION), adds to honesty the implication of high-mindedness or a nice sense of allegiance to the standards of one's profession, calling, or position; as, to rely on the honesty of a servant, of a tradesman, a man of scrupulous honesty, business honor is the foundation of trade; "Honesty is the best policy" (Proverb), cf. "Honor among thieves" (Proverb). INTEGRITY denotes uprightness or incorruptibility, esp. in the execution of trusts; PROBITY is tried integrity; as, "his unimpeachable integrity as treasurer of a widows' and orphans' fund" (Hawthorne); cf. "For intellectual integrity he [Huxley] was a spotless Sir Galahad" (J. Fiske); "That sort of probity and disinterestedness which such men as Bailey possess, does hold and grasp the tiptop of any spiritual honors that can be paid to anything in this world" (Keats). See RECTITUDE, HONEST, JUSTICE, FAIR.

hon'ey (hŭn'ĭ), n. [ME. honi, huni, AS. hunig; akin to OS. honeg, D. & G. honig, OHG. honag, honang, Icel. hunang, Sw. håning, Dan. honning.] 1. A sweet viscid material elaborated in the honey sac of bees of various kinds out of the nectar of flowers, and stored up in the nest or hive (cf. HONEYCOMB) to serve as food for the colony, esp. during the winter. With certain wild animals and with man honey is a favorite article of food. Its flavor and color depend largely on the plants from which the nectar is gathered, that of clover being especially esteemed. Bees will also carry off other sweet liquids for honey making, as sugar sirup, but not without impairing the quality of the honey. Honey consists principally of a mixture, in varying proportions, of sugars (glucose, fructose, and cane sugar) with a little water. The term honey is extended to various other sweet fluids, as to the nectar of flowers, and that collected or elaborated by various other insects (cf. HONEY ANT, HONEYDEW).

2. Honeylike quality or character.

hon'ey-bee' (hŭn'ĭ-bē'), n. Any of certain social honey-producing bees of Apis and allied genera, as Melipona or Trigona; commonly, Apis mellifera (syn. A. mellifica), a native of Europe, kept for its honey and wax in most parts of the world. A. mellifera has escaped and is found wild in many regions, including North America. Several varieties of this species, differing more or less in color, size, disposition, etc., are kept, as the common black, brown, or German race, which is hardy but difficult to manage on account of its temper, and the yellow Italian race and gray Carniolan race, which are preferred and extensively kept in the United States on account of their gentleness and honey-producing qualities. The honeybee raises its brood and stores up its honey in the cells of a comb (see HONEYCOMB) of wax. A normal colony consists of a fertile female, or queen, some males, or drones, which are stingless and do no work, and many (commonly several thousand) infertile females, or workers, which gather and prepare the food, produce the wax, build the comb, tend and feed the queen and young, and guard the hive or nest. Colonies are multiplied by swarming (see 4th SWARM, 1).

hon'ey-comb' (-kōm'), n. [AS. hunigcamb. See HONEY; 1st COMB.] 1. A mass of cells composed of wax (cf. BEESWAX) built by bees in their nest or hive to contain their brood and stores of pollen and honey. The cells are built of hexagonal prismatic form, which is the most economical of space and material. The free surfaces of the combs are nearly or quite vertical, the long axes of the cells horizontal or nearly so. Capillary attraction holds the honey in the cells until they are sealed. The size of the cells varies according to their use. With the common honeybee, cells for raising workers average 28, those for drones 18, to the square inch of surface, while those for queens are large and irregular, projecting from the surface of the comb.

2. That which rightfully attracts esteem, respect, or consideration, as dignity, courage, fidelity; esp., excellence of character; high moral worth; nobleness, specif., in men, integrity; uprightness; trustworthiness, in women, purity; chastity. From the conception of virtue that of honor is chiefly distinguished as connoting the virtues especially associated with rank, station, or profession; thus, "military honor" primarily denotes courage and fidelity, "business honor" denotes honesty and trustworthiness. Honor thus carries with it the notion of social obligation, and in societies having a caste organization, as in feudal societies, it often implies primarily a strict observance of caste obligations and in particular of the obligation not to bring disgrace upon persons of the same caste. Doubtless from its long association with feudal militarism is derived the conception that a lapse from honor is to be atoned only by death or by duel (see CODE OF HONOR), and the military and chivalric associations have given the word its distinctive reference to public recognition of conformance to the standard of conduct, courage, and good faith appropriate to one's station; as in the phrases: "national honor," nearly equivalent to "national good faith and self-respect;" "word of honor," a promise given or a statement made at the stake of one's standing; an "honorable peace" or an "honorable surrender," one in which the courage and proper conduct of the party in question is beyond dispute. Cf. NOBLESSE OBLIGE, BUSHIDO.

> I could not love thee, dear, so much, > Loved I not honor more. Lovelace

3. A nice sense of what is right, just, and true, with course of life correspondent thereto; strict conformity to the duty imposed by conscience, position, or privilege.

> If by honor is meant anything distinct from conscience, 't is no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers.

4. That to which esteem or consideration is paid; distinguished position; high rank.

> I have given thee . . . both riches, and honor. 1 Kings III. 13

5 A token of esteem paid to worth; a mark of respect, a ceremonial sign of consideration; as, he wore an honor on his breast; civil honors. "Funeral honors." Dryden.

7. A cause of respect and fame; a glory; an excellency; an ornament; as, he is an honor to his nation.

8. Eng. Feudal Law. A holding of a large amount of land including a number of manors; also, the seignorial franchise or jurisdiction annexed to it.

> To describe the wide lands held of the king by one of his mightier tenants the terms honor and barony were used. Between these terms we can draw no hard line; honor seems generally reserved for the very largest complexes of lands, and perhaps we may say that every honor was deemed a barony, while not every barony was usually called an honor. Pollock & Maitl.

9. pl. Academic distinctions; as, honors in classics.

10. pl. Whist. The ace, king, queen, and jack of trumps. The ten and nine are sometimes called Dutch honors.

6. A title of distinction given to certain officials and others, usually simply as a courtesy title. In Great Britain it is given to the younger children of earls, and to all the children of viscounts and barons; to maids of honor; to such justices of the High Court as are not Lords Justices or Lords of Appeal, to Lords of Session, to the Lord Provost of Glasgow during his tenure of office, and to members of governments or executive councils in India and the colonies. The title Most Honorable is given to marquises, and (collectively) to the Order of the Bath and H. M. Privy Council; that of Right Honorable to earls, viscounts, and barons, to privy councilors, and to various civil functionaries; sometimes also to peers' sons and daughters that have courtesy titles. (Cf. E. D.) In the United States Honorable is accorded esp. to members of Congress and of State legislatures, to Cabinet officers and their assistants, to commissioners of bureaus, heads of State departments, judges, and mayors of cities. In the Australasian colonies, ministers of the crown, members of the upper house of Parliament, and Speakers of the lower house, are styled Honorable during their term of office or membership.

Syn. — HONORABLE, HONORARY. HONORABLE commonly applies to that which is worthy of or proceeds from honor; that is HONORARY (less often, honorable) which confers or is an evidence of honor; as, an honorable calling, honorable service, an honorable man; an honorary degree (cf. honorable mention), an honorary vice president.

2. Having qualities which excite hope; affording promise of good or of success; as, a hopeful youth; a hopeful prospect. "Hopeful scholars." Addison.

Syn. — HOPEFUL, SANGUINE, CONFIDENT. HOPEFUL applies to that which is full of hope, or which inspires hope; that is SANGUINE which is habitually or confidently hopeful, or which looks for the best; as, "the air of youth, hopeful and cheerful" (Milton); "Others hopefully expect the remedy from the ingenuity of the next generations" (Fuller); "I may (without being too much sanguine) affirm, that . . . my affairs were never in so fair and hopeful a way" (Luidlow); "I am hopeful of purification [in politics], but not sanguine" (Lowell); "A sanguine temper, though forever expecting more good than occurs, does not always pay for its hopes by any proportionate depression. It soon flies over the present failure, and begins to hope again" (Jane Austen). CONFIDENT, as here compared (see SURE), adds the implication of assurance or positive expectation; as, "'That very chub I mean to put into your hands presently: sit you but down in the shade, and stay but a little while, and I'll warrant you I 'll bring him to you.' 'I 'll sit down, and hope well, because you seem so confident'" (Walton). See CONFIDENCE, EXPECT; cf. HOPELESS.

2. Giving no ground of hope; promising nothing desirable; desperate; as, a hopeless cause.

3. Unhoped for; despaired of. Obs.

Syn. — Desponding, despondent, disconsolate, downcast, forlorn; irretrievable, irrecoverable, irremediable, incurable. — HOPELESS, DESPERATE, DESPAIRING. HOPELESS, the general term, implies the abandonment of hope; DESPERATE connotes the recklessness, DESPAIRING, the utter hopelessness, of despair or extremity (see DESPONDENCY); as, "What sorrow strange . . . sent him, a hopeless wanderer, through mankind?" (Shelley); "hopeless of escape" (Cowper); "So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives, breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers" (Shak.); "This [loss] put the man in such a desperate mind, between revenge, and grief, and hunger joined, he leaped the trenches, scaled a castle wall, tore down a standard, took the fort and all" (Pope); "Now with Furies surrounded, despairing, confounded, he trembles" (id.); "tauntingly repelling the last despairing claim of a condemned culprit" (Ld. Cockburn). Hopeless also applies to that which is beyond hope or utterly unpromising, desperate, to that which is extremely perilous or past retrieving; as, "a hopeless task" (Cowper); "Alexis pines in hopeless love" (Pope); "Diseases desperate grown by desperate appliances are relieved, or not at all" (Shak.); "Haste is needful in this desperate case" (id.). Skr. çṛṅga horn, çiras head. Cf. CARAT, CORN on the foot, CORNEA, CORNER, CORNET, CORNUCOPIA, HART.] 1. One of the processes borne on the head of many ungulate mammals and used chiefly as weapons of offense or defense. The term includes structures of several distinct kinds, sometimes median in position, but usually lateral and paired. Those of cattle, sheep, goats, and true antelopes are unbranched and permanent and usually present in both sexes. They consist of a sheath of epidermal substance (see def. 8) supported by a bony core. Those of deer, specifically called antlers (see ANTLER), are solid, bony, usually branching outgrowths, which are shed and renewed annually, and are usually present only in the male. Those of the pronghorn (which see) are in some respects intermediate between the above types. The giraffe has small bony processes covered with ordinary skin. The median horn or horns of the rhinoceroses are entirely epidermal, with no bony core. Other forms occurred in extinct ungulates.

The species is believed

Horse, external parts 1 Lips, 2 Nose; 3 Face; 4 Forehead; 5 Eyebrows; 6 Forelock; 7 Ears, 8 Lower Jaw; 9 Cheek, 10 Nostril; 11 Poll; 12 Mane, 13 Chest, 14 Withers; 16 Ribs; 18 Loin; 19 Croup, 20 Tail; 22 Flank; 23 Belly, 24 Shoulder, 25 Elbow; 26 Forearm, 28 Knee; 29 Cannon or Shank; 30 Fetlock Joint, 31 Pastern; 32 Coronet; 33 Hoof; 34 Fetlock; 35 Haunch; 36 Thigh, 37 Stifle; 38 Buttock; 39 Gaskin, 40 Hock; 42 Cannon or Shank; 43 Fetlock Joint, 44 Fetlock; 45 Pastern; 46 Coronet, 47 Hoof to be no longer found in a truly wild state, the so-called wild horses having escaped from domestication. It was first domesticated in the Old World. Fossil remains show that horses, probably of other closely allied species, occurred also in America, where the genus appears to have become entirely extinct until reintroduced by the Spaniards. The horse is distinguished from the other existing members of the genus Equus and family Equidæ (the asses and zebras) by the long hair of the mane and tail, the usual presence of a callosity on the inside of the hind leg below the hock, and by other less constant characters, as the larger size, larger hoofs, more arched neck, small head, short ears, etc. (see EQUIDÆ). Though there are many breeds of horses, of which the Arabian is the most famous (see also BARB, FLEMISH, CLYDESDALE, SUFFOLK PUNCH, SHETLAND PONY, GALLOWAY, etc.), as well as minor races or strains (cf. HAMBLETONIAN, MORGAN), yet in breeding the attempt is usually made not to keep pure breeds, but to secure the desired qualities by judicious mixing, resulting in classes of horses adapted for special purposes (cf. THOROUGHBRED, TROTTER, PACER, HACKNEY, etc.). Other terms applied to horses, designating age, sex, etc., are stallion, mare, foal, colt, filly, and gelding (see these terms). In legal use, horse is sometimes used alone, as in statutes exempting horses from execution, to include any animal of the horse kind, as an ass (47 Ill. 462), a mule (38 Tenn. 154, 156), a mare (126 Cal. 286), a gelding (38 Tex. 199, 201), a colt (11 Tex. App. 89, 91); but when used with names of specific classes of horses, as in "horse, gelding, or mare," it is seldom construed in its general sense, but as having an appropriate specific sense in distinction from the kinds specifically named (26 Kan. 241; 31 Tex. 572; 149 Mo. 311).

2. The male of the genus horse, in distinction from the female or mare; usually, a castrated male or gelding, but sometimes, esp. on the race track, a stallion as distinguished from a gelding.

3. Zoöl. In a broad sense, any member of the family Equidæ, or horse family, which includes besides the asses and zebras various less specialized extinct types.

1. (In this sense usually hotchpotch.) A mingled mass; a confused mixture; a stew of various ingredients, a hodgepodge.

A mixture or hotchpotch of many tastes. Bacon.

2. (In this sense hotchpot.) Law. A blending, or throwing into a common lot or stock, of property for equality of division. Thus, formerly, in England, when lands had been given in frankmarriage to one daughter they were after the death of the ancestor blended with the lands descending to her and to her sisters from the same ancestor, and then divided in equal portions among all the daughters. In England the term is now applied only to the practice required by the Statute of Distributions (22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10), according to which the children of an intestate who have received advances must contribute or account to the intestate's personal estate for the value of the advances as of the time they were made, and then share in an equal distribution of the total estate. The term has been sometimes applied in cases of salvage. It corresponds in a measure with collation in the Civil and Scots law.

hot cockles. A rustic, or childish, play, in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

Hot'ten-tot (hŏt'n-tŏt), n. [D Hottentot; — so called from hot and tot, two syllables of frequent occurrence in their language. Wedgwood.] 1. One of a South African race apparently allied to both the Bushmen and Bantus and possibly sprung from an ancient cross of these two. They slightly exceed the Bushmen in height and cranial capacity. They are excessively dolichocephalic, of a yellowish brown complexion, and their prominent cheek bones and pointed chins give their faces a triangular appearance; their features are Negroid. The Namas are the purest Hottentots remaining. The Griqua, Gonaqua, and Damara are mixed races. A great number, from dispersed tribes, are scattered through Cape Colony, where they are now somewhat advanced from their former extreme degradation.
2. The Hottentot language, an agglutinative tongue of marvelous phonetic and grammatical development in view of the low order of the race speaking it. It possesses four of the "clicks" characteristic of Bushman; "tones" such as occur in the Indo-Chinese languages; grammatical gender (found in few other languages of non-Caucasian peoples); and relational suffixes closely resembling true inflections.

Hottentot apron, an excessive development of the labia minora occurring in Hottentot women. — H. bread, the elephant's-foot (Testudinaria elephantipes); also, its thick edible rootstock, formerly an article of diet among the Hottentots. — H. breadfruit, the Kafir bread. — H. cherry, a South African celastraceous plant (Cassine maurocenia) having handsome foliage, with small white or greenish flowers and drupaceous fruit. — H. rice, Zoöl., the larvæ and pupæ of ants, sometimes used as food.

hou-ba'ra (hō͞o-bä'ra), n. [Ar. hubāra bustard.] Either of two bustards, Houbara undulata of northern Africa and Asia Minor, and H. macqueeni of Persia, India, etc., the latter straying to England.

Hou'dan (hō͞o'dăn), n. [F., fr. Houdan, town in Seine-et-Oise, France.] One of a French breed of domestic fowls, of medium size, with a thick globular crest on the head, a V-shaped leaf comb, black and white mottled plumage, with pinkish legs and feet with five toes. They are esteemed for the table and are prolific layers.

hough'er (hŏk'ẽr), n. One who houghs, or hocks, cattle; specif. [cap.], in Ireland, one of a band (formed in 1711) of lawbreakers who practiced the hocking of cattle. The band became identified with the Whiteboys.

hound (hound), n. [Cf. Icel. hūnn knob, the knob at the masthead.] 1. pl. Naut. Projections at the masthead, serving as a support for the trestletrees and so the topmast, or, in small vessels, for the rigging, such as shrouds.
2. pl. Vehicles. Certain side bars in a vehicle, as those connecting the tongue of a wagon with the fore carriage, or the reach with the hind carriage, to give additional rigidity to those parts. See RUNNING GEAR, Illust.

hound (hound), n. [ME. hound, hund, dog, AS. hund; akin to OS. & OFries. hund, D. hond, G. hund, OHG. hunt, Icel. hundr, Dan. & Sw. hund, Goth. hunds, and prob. to Lith. szů, Ir. & Gael. cu, L. canis, Gr. κύων, κυνός, Skr. çvan; cf. also Goth. hinþan (in comp.) to catch. Cf. CANINE, CYNIC, KENNEL.] 1. Orig., a dog of any breed; in modern usage, specif., a dog of any of certain breeds used in the chase. The typical hounds have large drooping ears and a deep voice of characteristic tone, and follow their prey by scent. When used without qualification the term usually (esp. in England) designates the foxhound. Other more or less important and typical breeds are the harrier, bloodhound, beagle, basset hound, dachshund, otter hound, etc. (see these terms; also BOAR HOUND, STAGHOUND). Also, any of various other breeds of hunting dogs which follow their prey chiefly or entirely by sight, as the greyhound, Scotch deerhound, and the wolfhounds.
2. A despicable person. "Boy! false hound!" Shak.
3. A player who takes the part of one of the hounds in the game of hare and hounds, or paper chase.

hour circle. Astron. a Any circle of the celestial sphere passing through the two poles; esp., one of the twelve circles drawn on an artificial globe through the poles, and dividing the celestial equator into spaces of 15°, or one hour, each. b The circle upon an equatorial telescope mounted perpendicular to the polaxis, and graduated in hours and subdivisions of hours of right ascension. c A small brass circle attached to the pole of an artificial globe, and divided into twenty-four parts, or hours. It is used to mark differences of time in working problems on the globe.

hour'glass' (our'glăs'), n. 1 An instrument for measuring time, esp. the interval of an hour. It consists of a glass vessel having two compartments, from the uppermost compartment of which a quantity of sand, water, or mercury occupies an hour in running through a small aperture into the lower one. By reversal end for end, the hours are successively measured. A similar instrument measuring any other interval of time takes its name from the interval of time which is measured; as, a half-hour glass, a half-minute glass. A three-minute glass is sometimes called an egg glass, from being used to time the boiling of eggs.

fined by statute the term house is generally interpreted in accordance with the context and facts in each case. Thus a single room has been held to be a house on a prosecution for keeping a gaming house; a corncrib and a barrel shed were held to be houses in cases of arson; a business office was held to be a house under an ordinance regulating peddling. Prima facie, however, the term means a dwelling house with its appurtenances. Where more than one family or social group live under one roof in separate groups of rooms the term house may be applied to the entire structure or to one of its subdivisions, the nomenclature varying in different communities, and depending usually largely on the degree of separation of the subdivisions, as marked by separate entrances, party walls, and the like.

The Englishman's house is his castle, or, to use an older term, his burh, the king's borough is the king's house, for his house peace prevails in its streets F. W. Maitland

2. With qualifying prefix or adjective, a building used for other purposes than ordinary human habitation; as, bake*house*, ware*house*, green*house*, printing house, light*house*.

3. Anything serving an animal other than man for shelter or habitation, as the shell of a snail, the nest of a bird, etc.

4. Any place of abode, investment, or deposit, as the body as the habitation of the soul, the grave as the final abode of man, etc. "This mortal house I'll ruin" Shak.

Eyes which ache . . . for the dark house and the long sleep. Macaulay

5. Those who dwell in the same house; a household.

One that feared God with all his house. Acts x 2

6. A family of ancestors, descendants, and kindred; a race of persons from the same stock; a tribe; esp., a noble family or an illustrious race; as, the house of Hanover; the house of Israel. Specif.: Sociol. = GENS.

12. A theater or playhouse, hence, an audience, as at a theater, etc.; as, a small or a full house.

13. Astrol. a A twelfth part of the heavens as divided by six circles intersecting at the north and south points of the horizon, used by astrologers in noting the positions of the heavenly bodies, and casting horoscopes or nativities. The regions of sky within the circles of perpetual apparition and occultation were disregarded in the division into houses. The houses were regarded as fixed in respect to the horizon, and numbered from the one at the eastern horizon, called the ascendant, first house, or house of life, downward, or in the direction of the earth's revolution, the stars and planets passing through them in the reverse order every twenty-four hours. See HOROSCOPE. b A zodiacal sign regarded as the seat of a planet's greatest influence.

See LEGISLATURE. In the United States Congress, the House of Representatives is composed of members elected for two years by citizens of the various States according to the laws of the States in which they are chosen. A Representative must be an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen, at least twenty-five years of age, and must have been a citizen of the United States for not less than seven years. The number of Representatives from each State is based upon the population as determined by the census, which is taken every ten years. In 1908 the number of Representatives was 391. The House is not a continuing body, the terms of all the members expiring together. A new House is elected every second November, but the members-elect do not take their seats until the following March. Each Territory is entitled to send one delegate to the House of Representatives, who has the right to speak, but not to vote. — h. of the ascendant, Astrol., first house, or house of life; that house which is at the eastern horizon. — The H. that Jack built, a nursery tale in which each character is enumerated in succession upon the introduction of each new one; hence, a cumulative, repetitive story. — up in the h. roof, excited; excitable. *Obs. Hud'son's Bay Company (hŭd's'nz). A joint-stock association first chartered in 1670 by Charles II. and given then and thereafter enormous stretches of territory and exclusive trade rights throughout what is now Canada. It engaged exclusively in the fur trade, and spread a chain of forts and trading posts from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in the vicinity of which it exercised complete legislative, executive, and judicial power. By the Indians of the North it was regarded as more powerful than any nation, and it played a prominent part in the discussions between the United States and Great Britain over the northwest boundary. Its exclusive trading rights expired in 1859, and it sold most of its territory to the British government for Canada in 1869, but still retains many posts and its old semimilitary organization. It is commonly called "the H. B. C."

6. = HUMANE.

Syn. — HUMAN, HUMANE, MORTAL. HUMAN applies to whatever is characteristic of man as man; it frequently connotes, esp in modern usage, the common sympathies, passions, or failings of men, often in implied contrast with an attitude of superiority to them, as, "brutish forms, rather than human" (Milton); "if powers divine behold our human actions" (Shak.); "Yet tears to human suffering are due" (Wordsworth); "I thought I could not breathe in that fine air, that pure severity of perfect light — I yearned for warmth and color which I found in Lancelot — now I see thee what thou art, thou art the highest and most human too, not Lancelot, nor another" (Tennyson); he is a very human person. HUMANE (still sometimes applied broadly to whatever is befitting or honorable to humanity or which tends to humanize or refine) commonly refers, in modern usage, to that which evinces active sympathy or compassion for other human beings, or (esp.) for the lower animals; as, "Shakespeare or Vergil — souls in whom sweetness and light, and all that in human nature is most humane, were eminent" (M. Arnold); humane studies; "Ah, treat [thy horses] kindly! . . . show that thou hast mercy, which the great, with needless hurry whirled from place to place, humane as they would seem, not always show" (Cowper); the Humane Society. MORTAL, as here compared (see DEADLY), emphasizes more strongly than human the idea of transiency, limitation, or frailty, and (often) suggests a contrast with immortal; as, "invisible to mortal sight" (Milton); "our mortal nature's strife" (Shelley); "her stature more than mortal" (Tennyson); cf. "looking . . . larger than human" (id.); "What fools these mortals be!" (Shak.).

2. Having the feelings and inclinations creditable to man; having, showing, or evidencing, a disposition to treat other human beings or animals with kindness or compassion; kind; benevolent. Humane was at first but a variant spelling of human (see pron.), but during the 16th and 17th centuries became more and more restricted to the senses involving moral qualities.

What distinguishes the whole work of Raphael is its humanity in the double sense of the humane and the human J. A. Symonds.

3. Humanizing; exalting; refining; as, humane studies.

Syn. — Kind, benevolent, compassionate, sympathetic, tender-hearted; lenient, clement, pitiful, forgiving. HUMANE, MERCIFUL. HUMANE (see HUMAN) emphasizes the element of kindness, benevolence, or sympathy, without necessary implication of a possible conflict between these and opposite feelings; MERCIFUL more frequently implies forbearing treatment, esp. of those who have offended, or who merit (or are defenseless against) severity; as, "Christianity, the most compassionate and humane religion in the world" (Bp. Pearce); "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness" (Heb. viii. 12); the humane spirit of prison reform; "Away with her to prison! — Good my lord, be good to me; your honor is accounted a merciful man" (Shak.). See MERCY, PITY.

hum'ble (hŭm'b'l; formerly, and still occas., ŭm'b'l), a.; HUM'BLER (-blĕr); HUM'BLEST (-blĕst). [ME. also umble, F. humble, fr. L. humilis on the ground, low, fr. humus the earth, ground, cf. Gr. χαμαί on the ground. Cf. CHAMELEON, HUMILIATE, HOMAGE.] 1. Thinking lowly of one's self; claiming little as one's desert; not proud or assertive in spirit, manner, or seeming; lowly; meek.

Without a humble imitation of the divine Author of our . . . religion we can never hope to be a happy nation. Washington

2. Near the ground; not high or lofty; not pretentious or magnificent; unpretending; unassuming; as, a humble cottage.

My low and humble name Shak.

Syn. — Unpretending, unassuming, modest, meek, mild; poor, mean, plain, simple. — HUMBLE, LOWLY, LOW. HUMBLE (opposed to proud) and LOWLY (often opposed to lofty) are frequently interchangeable, whether referring to freedom from pride, or to modest or unpretentious state or condition; as, "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble" (James iv. 6); "Surely he scorneth the scorners, but he giveth grace unto the lowly" (Prov. iii. 34); "poor lowly maid" (Shak.); "poor humble swain" (id.). In modern usage, humble often connotes undue self-depreciation, sometimes verging on abjectness; lowly is less frequently applied to persons, and carries no derogatory implication; as, "She is humble to abjectness" (De Quincey); cf. to eat humble pie, "Thy soul was like a star, and dwelt apart, . . . and yet thy heart the loutliest duties on herself did lay" (Wordsworth). Low, on account of its common implication of inferiority, is rare as a synonym for humble or lowly, except where the context renders its meaning clear; as, "That mood which with the lofty sanctifies the low" (Wordsworth); cf. "Low desires, low thoughts had there no place; yet was his heart lowly; for he was meek in gratitude" (id.). See MENIAL, SHY, ABASE.

Humble Petition and Advice. Eng. Hist., a petition presented to Cromwell by the Parliament summoned in 1656, asking that certain changes of the constitution might be agreed to by mutual consent, and that he should assume the title of king. Cromwell rejected the title, and it was passed in an amended form, in May, 1657, and assented to by Cromwell. In June it was modified by the Additional Petition and Advice. — h. pie. a Umble pie, or pie made of the inferior parts of a deer and served to the huntsman and other servants. b In the phrase to eat humble pie, humiliation. See under EAT. — h. plant, the sensitive plant.

Ruby-and-topaz Humming Bird (Chrysolampis mosquitus) humming bird, any of numerous nonpasserine birds which constitute the family Trochilidæ, remarkable for the small size of most species, and the brilliant iridescent plumage of the males, which in some forms have remarkable crests, neck tufts, or elongated tail feathers. The family comprises the smallest of birds, many being less than three inches long. Anatomically they are related to the swifts, and like them have narrow wings with long primaries, but the bill is slender and the tongue very extensile. Their food, mostly obtained by hovering over flowers, consists of small insects, nectar, etc. In flying, the beats of their wings are so rapid that only a blur is visible, and a humming sound is produced. They are pugnacious in disposition and courageous in defending their nests against larger birds and animals. Their voice is weak and usually unmusical. The nests are often beautifully constructed. But two white eggs are laid. Numerous genera and over 400 species, all American and mostly tropical, are known. A single species, the rubythroat (Trochilus colubris), occurs in the eastern United States and Canada. Several are found in the western States, notably the broad-tailed humming bird (Selasphorus platycercus) in the Rocky Mountain region, and the rufous humming bird (S. rufus), which is common on the Pacific coast and ranges north to Alaska. — h.-bird bush, a South American fabaceous shrub (Æschynomene montevidensis) the flowers of which are much frequented by humming birds. — h.-bird moth, a hawk moth. — h.-bird's trumpet, the California fuchsia (Zauschneria).

1. The product of ten multiplied by ten; five score. Also, a symbol representing one hundred units, as 100 or C.

☞ The words hundred, thousand, million, etc., often take a plural form. We say hundreds, thousands, or millions, many hundreds, thousands, or millions, meaning individual units; but with a cardinal numeral adjective, each hundred, thousand, or million is commonly thought of as a separate aggregate; as, ten hundreds are one thousand.

2. In England, later also in Ireland, a division of a county, formerly having its own local court (the hundred court or hundred moot); also, the body of landholders and residents of the hundred, or, formerly, its court (see MOOT) or a session of the court. The jurisdiction of the court (which was not a court of record) was taken away by the County Courts Act of 1867, s. 28. The origin of the division is uncertain; it is often identified with a similar division among the Germanic races. Cf. WAPENTAKE, WARD.

The hundred . . has been regarded: as denoting simply a division of a hundred hides of land; as the district which furnished a hundred warriors to the host, as representing the original settlement of the hundred warriors; or as composed of a hundred hides each of which furnished a single warrior William Stubbs
